BROOKLYN URBAN GARDENER CERTIFICAT PROGRAM

GreenBridge, the community environmental horticulture program of Brooklyn Botanic Garden, promotes the greening of the urban environment and reaches over 50,000 Brooklyn residents a year through free educational workshops, conservation initiatives, and creative partnerships. The new Brooklyn Urban Gardener (BUG) program is a ten-week course of interconnected workshops that cover the basics in urban gardening and community greening. Working in teams, students will also partner with Brooklyn-based organizations to complete a real-life project and donate at least 30 hours to help meet existing needs throughout the borough. Upon completing the course and volunteering for 30 hours, graduates will be certified as Brooklyn Botanic Garden BUG volunteers and support greening projects at community organizations such as schools, senior centers, block associations, community gardens, and more. Learn more about Greenbridge's programs by visiting bbg.org/greenbridge.

Applications for the fall BUG class are due no later than June 1.

Apprenticeship and Job Opportunities with the Bushwick Farmers' Market

EcoStation:NY is a Brooklyn-based nonprofit devoted to both food security and environmental justice, and where the two intersect: human and community health. We believe in the universal right of all to a healthy food supply and planet. We envision a future in which people have better access to affordable, pesticide-free produce, access to land and the skills to grow food, and opportunities for community involvement, education, and meaningful employment for all. Our current projects include Bushwick Farmers' Market (now in three locations), Bushwick Campus Farm & Greenhouse, and Farm-In-The-Sky, a fledgling rooftop farm. More info at: www.EcoStationNY.org and www.BushwickFarmersMarket.org; or follow Bushwick Campus Farm and Bushwick Farmers Market on Facebook for updates and BushwickCampusF on Twitter! To look at the listing of apprenticeships and job opportunities please go to organization's website at www.BushwickFarmerMarket.org

All interested applicants please email cover letter and resume to Travis@EcoStationNY.org.

DEC UNVEILS NEW COMMUNITY AIR SCREEN PROGRAM TO EXPLORE LOCAL AIR QUALITY ISSUES

The New York State Department of Environment Conservation today launched a Community Air Screen Program designed to partner with community groups to conduct air quality surveillance, DEC Commissioner Joe Martens announced. Applications to participate in the program will be accepted until May 24. The program will enable local community groups and residents to take air samples in neighborhoods across the state to help identify and address local air quality concerns. DEC will analyze the samplings for possible air pollutants. "The Community Air Screen Program will help understand air quality concerns at the community level." "This program focuses on local-scale sampling and empowers environmentally-conscious residents to get involved in improving the air quality in their communities." The Community Air Screen Program will focus on gaseous pollutants including benzene, which is found in gasoline; perchloroethylene, which is used by some dry cleaning facilities and methylene chloride, which is used as a solvent and paint stripper. If air toxics are detected at levels of concern, DEC will conduct additional testing. If further sampling confirms air quality concerns, DEC staff will determine possible sources contributing to the pollution levels of concern and look at ways to reduce them. Additional, a recommendation will be made for further evaluation through EPA's Community-Based Air Toxics Program. Community groups and residents interested in participating in this program can obtain more information or an application online at <http://www.dec.ny.gov/public/81629.html> or call the DEC office at (518) 402-8044.
