

Preface

This is the twenty-fourth status report on the general operations of the New York City Civilian Complaint Review Board (CCRB), as reorganized pursuant to Local Law No. 1 of 1993, effective July 5, 1993.

This report covers the period of January 2005 through December 2005 (Volume XIII, No. 2).

Publication Date: June 2006

Board Mission and Values

The New York City Civilian Complaint Review Board (CCRB) is an independent and non-police mayoral agency. It is empowered to receive, investigate, hear, make findings and recommend action on complaints against New York City police officers which allege the use of excessive or unnecessary force, abuse of authority, discourtesy, or the use of offensive language. The board's investigative staff, which is composed entirely of civilian employees, conducts investigations in an impartial fashion. The board forwards its findings to the police commissioner.

In fulfillment of this mission, the board has pledged:

- To encourage members of the community to file complaints when they feel they have been victims of police misconduct.
- To encourage all parties involved in a complaint to come forward and present whatever evidence they may have.
- To investigate each allegation thoroughly and impartially.
- To examine carefully each investigative report and to ensure that all possible efforts have been made to resolve the complaint.
- To make objective determinations on the merits of each case.
- To recommend disciplinary actions that are fair and appropriate, if and when the investigative findings show that misconduct occurred.
- To respect the rights of civilians and officers.
- To engage in community outreach throughout New York City to educate the general public concerning the agency's purpose and the services provided and to respond to the comments and questions of the public concerning issues relevant to the agency's operation.
- To report patterns of misconduct uncovered during the course of investigations and review of complaints to the police commissioner.
- To report relevant issues and policy matters coming to the board's attention to the police commissioner.

Members of the Board

Hector Gonzalez, Esq., Chair

A partner at Mayer, Brown, Rowe & Maw, Mr. Gonzalez concentrates his practice in the areas of complex commercial litigation and white-collar criminal defense. He began his legal career at Rogers & Wells in 1988. In 1990 Mr. Gonzalez accepted a position as an assistant district attorney in New York County. He remained there until 1993, when he returned to Rogers & Wells. In 1994, he became an assistant United States attorney in the Southern District of New York, and was deputy chief, then chief, of the Narcotics Unit from 1997 until 1999. Mr. Gonzalez was a Fulbright scholar in Guatemala in 1998 and a visiting lecturer of trial advocacy at the University of San Carlos, Guatemala City. He is a member of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, the Federal Bar Council and the Hispanic National Bar Association. Mr. Gonzalez also sits on the New York State Federal Judicial Screening Committee and is a member of the board of the Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund. Mr. Gonzalez, a mayoral designee, has been on the board since June 2000, and has served as chair of the CCRB since April 2002.

J.D., 1988, University of Pennsylvania Law School; M.A., 1995, John Jay College of Criminal Justice, City University of New York; B.S., 1985, Manhattan College

Dennis deLeon, Esq.

Mr. deLeon worked as a law clerk for the California Court of Appeals, an associate at Los Angeles' Kadison, Pfaelzer, Woodward, Quinn & Rossi, a trial attorney for the United States Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., and regional counsel to California Rural Legal Assistance. Mr. deLeon began his New York career at the Office of the Corporation Counsel, where as a senior assistant corporation counsel he focused on civil rights cases and supervised police misconduct actions. In 1986 he was appointed director of the Mayor's Commission on Latino Concerns. In 1988 he became deputy Manhattan borough president and, in 1990, Mayor David Dinkins appointed Mr. deLeon chair of the New York City Commission on Human Rights. He returned to private practice in early 1994 and since September 1994 has served as president of the Latino Commission on AIDS. Currently a member of the New York State Bar Association and the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, Mr. deLeon is the city council designee from Manhattan and has been a board member since October 2003.

J.D., 1974, Stanford Law School; B.A., 1970, Occidental College

James Donlon, Esq.

Mr. Donlon is an attorney engaged in private practice since 1980. He has broad-based experience in matters such as real estate, estate planning, wills and estates, and litigation involving family court, criminal, and personal injury cases. From 1974 to 1980, Mr. Donlon was employed as an assistant district attorney in the Richmond County District Attorney's Office where he handled misdemeanors, felonies (including homicides) and, from 1976 to 1977, narcotics cases for the Special Narcotics Prosecutor's Office. Immediately after graduating from law school, Mr. Donlon worked for the New York State Department of Law. Mr. Donlon is chair of the Richmond County Bar Association's Admissions Committee and co-chair of its Family Court Committee. He previously served as a board member of the Richmond County Bar Association. He is currently a member of the Assigned Counsel Plan Advisory Committee (Appellate Division, Second Department) and of the New York State Defenders Association. Mr. Donlon, a city council designee from Staten Island, has been a member of the CCRB since June 2004.

MICHAEL R. BLOOMBERG

CHAIR

May 2006

To Members of the Public:

I am honored to present the New York City Civilian Complaint Review Board's January-December 2005 Status Report.

Though the number of complaints filed with the agency rose for the fifth consecutive year, the CCRB also continued to improve its productivity. In 2005, the board closed 12% more cases than in 2004 and 34% more than in 2003. At the same time, the annual rate of increase in the number of complaint filings began to slow, dropping from a 20% jump in 2003 and a 12% rise in 2004 to a 10% increase in 2005. Still, in the 2005 calendar year, the CCRB received 6,796 complaints, the most received in any year in the agency's independent history.

It is important to note that an increase in complaints is not in and of itself an indication of an increase in police misconduct. Many factors contribute to the rise and fall of the number of complaints filed each year, including the total number of encounters between officers and civilians, the accessibility of and public confidence in the complaint process, the general relations between the community and the police, and other less tangible factors. The agency does not generally speculate on the root causes of fluctuations in the complaint rate.

Two characteristics of the rise in complaint filings may help explain the increase. First, the complaint increase has been driven by telephone complaints: since 2001, the number of complaints filed by telephone directly to the CCRB (which includes 311 calls transferred to the agency) has nearly tripled, from 1,401 to 4,100. During these same five years, the number of CCRB complaints civilians first filed with the NYPD actually decreased. Although the rise in complaint filings began before implementation of the 311 system in March 2003, and not all telephone complaints to the agency are transferred through 311, the system has clearly played a role in the increase. Second, complaints involving abuse of authority allegations such as "question and/or stop" have risen at rates higher than complaints in which force, discourtesy, or offensive language allegations are lodged. In 2005, abuse of authority allegations comprised more than half of all allegations lodged with the CCRB.

In 2005, the rate at which the board determined that officers committed misconduct in complaints it investigated declined. While the board substantiated one or more allegations in 16% of all full investigations in 2004, in 2005 it did so only 10% of the time. From 2001 through 2005 the board substantiated 12% of all full investigations it closed. The decline in the substantiation rate in 2005 therefore reflects a rate more consistent with the board's historical average.

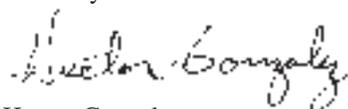

Over the past several years, productivity has been a priority of the agency: resources have been concentrated in the Investigations Division, departing investigators have been replaced quickly, and the executive staff has taken steps to make investigations themselves more efficient. Despite a record number of complaint filings in 2005, the agency closed 704 more cases in 2005 than in 2004 and 1,639 more cases than in 2003. Even with these productivity increases, however, the board has not been able to keep pace with the number of complaints it receives, and by the end of 2005 there were over 200 more cases on the open docket than at the beginning of the year.

The CCRB has relied on efficiency measures to improve its productivity because its budget has remained static. In fact, for the past three years the CCRB has had to rely on single-year funding of approximately $1 million allotted to it in the city's adopted budget. The administration's preliminary five-year budget plans have not included this essential funding. The board will continue to urge the administration to include funds needed for the agency's basic operations in the five-year budget plans, allowing the CCRB to utilize the same expenditure of taxpayer monies more effectively.

The CCRB remains committed to its core mission of investigating and mediating allegations of police misconduct thoroughly and expeditiously; agency staff and members of the board look forward to continuing to serve the people and the police of New York City.

Sincerely

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Complaint Activity

- For the fifth straight year, the number of complaints filed with the CCRB increased over the previous year. In 2005, the agency received 6,796 complaints, 600 more than the 6,196 received in 2004. The cumulative effect of the complaint increase is dramatic: the number of complaints filed in 2005 was 60% higher than the 4,251 filed in 2001.
- The number of complaints filed by telephone has risen faster than complaints filed by other means. While the number of CCRB complaints that the agency receives that were filed initially with the NYPD has actually decreased over the past five years, the number of complaints filed directly with the agency by telephone has increased by 193%. While the increase began before the implementation of the city's 311 system and did not stop when the system reached maturity, 311 has clearly played some role in the increase.
- The number of abuse of authority allegations, such as allegations of improper stops, frisks, or searches, has increased at a rate higher than the number of other types of allegations. In 2005, for the first time, these allegations made up more than half of all those that the agency received. From 2001 to 2005, for example, the number of allegations that a civilian was improperly questioned and/or stopped rose from 399 to 2,244, an increase of 462%.
- At the borough level, the location of incidents leading to a complaint and the assignment of subject officers in complaints has remained remarkably consistent over time. In 2005, as was the case in each of the past five years, more complaints stemmed from incidents taking place in Brooklyn than any other borough, followed by Manhattan, the Bronx, Queens, and Staten Island. The relative proportion of complaints taking place within each borough did not change by more than a couple of percentage points from one year to the next.
- In 2005, as in each of the past five years, the demographic composition of alleged victims of CCRB complaints has not reflected the demographics of New York City, with blacks, males, and the young overrepresented. More than half the alleged victims of CCRB complaints in 2005 were black, consistent with the five-year average. Moreover, more than two-thirds of all alleged victims were male, and nearly a third were between the ages of 15 and 24, an age group that makes up only 14% of all New Yorkers.¹

Agency Performance

- The CCRB continued to improve its productivity in the face of record complaint numbers last year. The board closed a total of 6,522 cases in 2005, 12% more than it closed in 2004 and the most it has closed since 1995. All the while, the quality of investigations, as measured by the rate at which the board made conclusive determinations about whether misconduct occurred, remained high, and the age of the open docket decreased.
- The agency was able to perform efficiently by maintaining a high investigator headcount and increasing the number of cases assigned to monthly board panels. With an average of 143 investigators, the average investigator caseload dropped to 19, which increased individual productivity; in 2005 the average investigator submitted 47 cases to the board, three more than in 2004. In addition, in September the board increased the number of cases each panel considers monthly to 175, allowing it to better handle the larger number of cases it received from the Investigations Division. From October 1, 2005, through the end of the year, the agency's open docket decreased from 4,035 to 3,467.
- Despite significant improvements in its productivity, the board could not keep pace with 2005 complaint filings and, as a result, over the course of the entire calendar the agency's open docket grew. While the number of open cases within the Investigations Division (that is, excluding cases that are pending board review or on the Mediation Unit's docket) declined during 2005, the board received nearly 300 cases more than it was able to close.

- Because of major personnel changes, the Mediation Unit was not as productive in 2005 as it had been in 2004. In the first half of the year, both the director of mediation and the senior mediation coordinator relocated outside of New York. After an extensive search, Victor Voloshin, a mediator who had mediated cases at the CCRB and elsewhere, became the agency's new mediation director on May 23, 2005. The turnover affected productivity; the agency mediated 90 complaints and closed 98 others with the disposition mediation attempted in 2005, 22 fewer cases than it closed through the mediation process in 2004. However, with Mr. Voloshin in place, the unit accepted 200 cases for processing from July through December 2005, 45 cases more than it accepted in the first half of 2005.

Case Dispositions

- Of the 2,679 full investigations the agency conducted in 2005, the board substantiated one or more allegations in 260, or 10% of the cases. This represents a significant drop from the 16% of all full investigations in which the board substantiated an allegation in 2004, but is only slightly lower than the five-year average of 12%, suggesting that the high rate in 2004 was the statistical anomaly. The board has succeeded less frequently in identifying the subject officers of allegations following a full investigation; in 2005, this rate was at 9%, the highest in five years.
- Consistent with previous years, the board substantiated a higher percentage of abuse of authority allegations and a lower percentage of force allegations than it did all allegations. The abuse of authority allegations with the highest substantiation rates included allegations of improper stops, frisks, and searches; allegations of excessive or unnecessary physical (bodily) force were exonerated at rates higher than all allegations.
- The board forwards all cases in which it substantiates one or more allegations to the NYPD for disciplinary action; in most cases it recommends the type of discipline it believes appropriate to the misconduct. In 2005, the severity of discipline the NYPD actually imposed against officers the CCRB determined committed misconduct decreased dramatically. Nearly 60% of all officers against whom the NYPD imposed discipline received instructions, the mildest disciplinary option available, double the rate of 2004. The decline in penalties has not stemmed from the CCRB recommending less severe discipline; the board recommended instructions as the appropriate discipline for only 1% and 3% of the officers whom it found committed misconduct in 2004 and 2005, respectively.

- This report contains an account of the resolutions of the 63 complaints that resulted from encounters between police and demonstrators at the Republican National Convention in 2004. The CCRB substantiated three of these cases, against a sergeant, a lieutenant, and a deputy chief. A complete breakdown of all the convention-related case closures is contained in the report.

Operations

- In March 2005, Mayor Bloomberg appointed Dr. Mohammad Khalid to serve on the board. Dr. Khalid is a mayoral designee, filling a seat that had been vacant since Tai Park resigned in December of 2003. Dr. Khalid has worked as a dentist in Staten Island since 1977. He is president of both the Iron Hill Civic Association and the Pakistani Civic Association of Staten Island. He served as a member of the New York City Charter Revision Commission and has received numerous awards for his public service.
- For three consecutive years, the CCRB has relied upon supplemental, single-year funding provided during the adopted budget process to absorb the increase in demand for the agency's services. In June 2005, the fiscal year 2006 adopted budget included $1 million to support 24 investigator positions; the fiscal year 2007 and out-year budgets, however, do not include this funding. Thus, the CCRB once again has requested that the administration add approximately $1.2 million to its preliminary fiscal year 2007 budget plans to ensure that the CCRB has adequate staffing to handle the number of complaints it is receiving.
- On May 12, 2004, after numerous investigations revealed that officers had conducted strip searches without proper justification the CCRB recommended that the NYPD enhance its training of officers, particularly supervisors, to ensure that they adhere to Patrol Guide strip-search procedures. At the time of the CCRB's recommendation, the police department issued an order regarding strip search procedures that supervisors read at ten consecutive role calls. The department also announced that it would develop a training video in response to the CCRB's recommendation. To date, however, the department has not yet completed the training video or altered its strip search training procedures.

AGENCY OPERATIONS

History

In 1953, the New York City Police Department established the Civilian Complaint Review Board to investigate civilian complaints against New York City police officers. Forty years later the board became an all-civilian agency independent of the New York City Police Department.

The original review board consisted of three deputy police commissioners who were charged with the responsibility of reviewing investigative reports prepared by police department staff; the board then reported its findings and recommendations directly to the police commissioner. From 1955 to 1965 only minor administrative changes were made to the board's operation. One deputy commissioner was appointed to chair the board and the board's offices were moved from a recognized police facility to a more neutral site, a move intended to create a more comfortable environment for civilians making complaints and giving testimony.

In 1966, Mayor John Lindsay sought to alter the board's structure when he appointed four private citizens to serve on it. This triggered strong opposition from the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association, which called for an electoral referendum to abolish the "mixed" board. In November 1966, the voters approved the referendum eliminating the "mixed" board. As a result, the board was once again made up solely of police executives appointed by the police commissioner. Its investigative staff, which was responsible for conducting the investigations of civilian complaints, was composed of New York City police officers. While the number of police department executives serving on the board increased, the board's organizational structure did not change until 1987.

In that year, during the term of Mayor Edward Koch and in accordance with legislation passed in 1986 by the New York City Council, the board was again restructured as a mixed board on which both private citizens and police executives served. The 1986 law changed the number of Civilian Complaint Review Board members to twelve, one of whom served as the chair. The mayor, with the advice and consent of the city council, appointed six members who were private citizens, one from each borough and one at large. From his executive staff, the police commissioner selected and appointed the other six members. By statute, the board members' terms were limited to two years and the mayoral designees were compensated on a per diem basis for their service. In 1987, the board's investigative unit, known as the Civilian Complaint Investigative Bureau, also began hiring a limited number of civilian investigators to complement its staff of police officer investigators. The board, however, remained a unit within the police department.

After a well-publicized political debate and with the support of Mayor David Dinkins, the city council modified the city charter in January 1993 to create the first police oversight agency in New York City independent of the police department. On July 5, 1993, the independent CCRB became a functioning agency, and the first meeting of the new board was held the following

1993 Enabling Statute

It is in the interest of the people of the city of New York and the New York City police department that the investigation of complaints concerning misconduct by officers of the department be complete, thorough and impartial. These inquiries must be conducted fairly and independently, and in a manner in which the public and the police department have confidence. An independent civilian complaint review board is hereby established as a body comprised solely of members of the public with the authority to investigate allegations of police misconduct.

-New York City Charter Chapter 18-A, §440(a) month. Since that time, the board members and staff have been private citizens. New York's Civilian Complaint Review Board is now the largest independent civilian oversight agency in the United States.

The CCRB has jurisdiction over complaints of police misconduct involving force, abuse of authority, discourtesy, and offensive language (FADO). If the type of police misconduct alleged in a complaint does not fall under its jurisdiction, the CCRB will refer the case to the appropriate agency or department, such as the NYPD's Office of the Chief of Department (OCD). All allegations of corruption are referred to the Internal Affairs Bureau (IAB).

Agency Structure

The CCRB consists of a board of thirteen members of the public and a civilian staff that receives, investigates, and makes recommendations on complaints in addition to fulfilling all other necessary duties. The mayor appoints all thirteen members of the board, who must be residents of New York City and "shall reflect the diversity of the city's population."² The city council designates (or nominates) five members of the board, one from each of the city's five boroughs; the police commissioner designates (or nominates) three members of the board who must have experience as law enforcement professionals; and the mayor designates the remaining five board members, including the chair. Aside from the three members designated by the police commissioner, no other member may have prior law enforcement experience or be former employees of the New York City Police Department. (Under the city charter, experience as an attorney in a prosecutorial agency does not constitute experience as a law enforcement professional.) No members of the board, who serve for overlapping three-year terms, shall hold any other public office or employment.³ All board members are eligible for compensation for their work on a per diem basis.

The board generally meets at 10 a.m. on the second Wednesday of every month. These meetings are open to members of the public, who are given the opportunity to comment. During the monthly meetings, board members discuss policy issues and the executive director reports on complaint activity, case closures, and the agency's docket. Board committees, such as the Operations Committee, the Alternative Dispute

CCRB Jurisdiction

Force refers to the use of unnecessary or excessive force, up to and including deadly force.

Abuse of Authority refers to abuse of police powers to intimidate or otherwise mistreat a civilian and can include improper street stops, frisks, searches, the issuance of retaliatory summonses, and unwarranted threats of arrest.

Discourtesy refers to inappropriate behavioral or verbal conduct by the subject officer, including rude or obscene gestures, vulgar words and curses.

Offensive Language refers to slurs, derogatory remarks, and/or gestures based up on a person's sexual orientation, race, ethnicity, religion, gender or disability.

Resolution Committee, the Public Outreach and Education Committee, the MIS Committee, and the Reports and Recommendations Committee, also issue reports and may submit recommendations for policy changes to the full board for approval. Following the public meeting, the board retires to a non-public executive session, where it votes on particular cases or discusses personnel matters.

The board hires the executive director, who in turn hires and supervises the agency's all-civilian staff. There are two deputy executive directors, one responsible for administration and one for investigations. The administrative division is responsible for all non-investigative agency functions and duties. In addition to performing fundamental administrative functions like budgeting, purchasing, facilities management, and secretarial responsibilities, the administrative division includes the personnel department, management information services (MIS), the mediation and outreach units, and the research and statistics unit. It also includes the case management unit, which organizes completed investigative files for board panel review and oversees the inventory of closed CCRB cases.

The deputy executive director for investigations supervises the entire investigative staff, which is responsible for receiving, reviewing, and investigating complaints, as well as processing complaints that do not lead to full investigations. Assigned to eight investigative teams, CCRB investigators are supervised by team managers with at least 10 years of law enforcement or investigative experience gained through work in organizations such as the Internal Revenue Service Criminal Investigative Division, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Federal Defender Service, the Chicago Police Department, and the CCRB itself. Each team manager works closely with team supervisors and assistant supervisors to monitor the work of approximately 15 investigators. Investigators are hired through a rigorous process that invests considerable autonomy in the managers and supervisors of each team. Together, managers and supervisors review resumes, conduct extensive interviews, and evaluate candidates before presenting their evaluations and recommendations to the executive staff for final review.

The Complaint Process

Complaints of police misconduct may be reported directly to the CCRB by telephone, letter, e-mail, in person, or via the CCRB website. They can also be filed in person at police precincts or other police department facilities. Complainants can access the CCRB through the city's 311 service twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. Outside of New York, the 311 service can be reached at 212-NEW-YORK; for the hearing impaired, the CCRB can be reached on a TTY/TDD line at 212-504-4115.

When a complaint is received, the CCRB makes a distinction between a “complainant” (the person who files the complaint) and an “alleged victim” (the person who had the primary encounter with the police). If the complainant is the alleged victim, he or she is referred to as the “complainant/victim.” The preceding terms will be used according to the definitions above throughout this report.

Complaint Intake

Investigators and administrative staff members receive and input all complaints, then forward them to investigative teams. Team managers and supervisors review the complaints to determine whether the allegations fall within the CCRB's jurisdiction. If the complaint does not fall within the CCRB's jurisdiction, it is sent to the appropriate agency.

Full Investigations

Team managers and supervisors receive a case from complaint intake and assign it to an investigator, who must attempt to contact the complainant within 24 hours of receipt of the complaint.

The investigator is responsible for locating and interviewing the complainant, alleged victims (if different from the complainant), and civilian witnesses. The investigator also interviews any officers who are the subjects of the allegations or who witnessed the incident at issue. Interviews with both civilians and police officers are tape-recorded and summarized in writing.

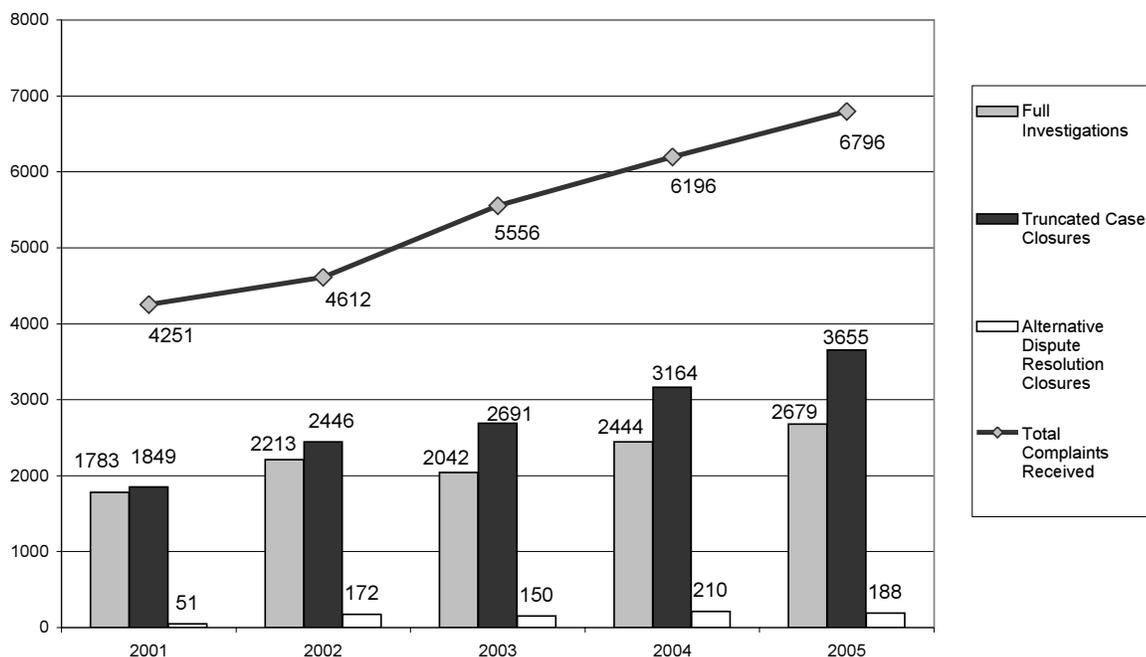

In addition, the investigator is required to obtain all relevant documentary evidence, including court-related records and police department records (e.g., accident reports, summonses, stop and frisk reports, arrest reports, and recordings of both police radio communications and 911 calls). If relevant, the investigator also subpoenas medical records in order to verify whether civilians or police officers sustained injuries associated with the incident under investigation. Pursuant to Patrol Guide procedure 211-14, an officer is required to appear at the CCRB when summoned for an interview and must answer all relevant questions to the best of his or her knowledge. An officer cannot invoke the Fifth Amendment, since the questioning is conducted pursuant to a grant of use immunity.

The team manager, supervisor, and assistant supervisor oversee the investigator throughout the course of the investigation. Cases are subject to a time-triggered review process—a manager or other supervisor reviews a case and instructs an investigator on what steps should be taken after the investigator has interviewed the complainant and again four, eight, and twelve months after the complaint was filed. Cases over a year old and reassigned cases are reviewed monthly. When the investigation is complete, the investigator writes a closing report, which includes a summary and analysis of the evidence and recommended dispositions for each allegation raised by the complaint. Team management reviews the completed closing report before the case is forwarded to the Case Management Unit, which assigns the case to a board panel.

An initial interview is essential to the complaint process

If a case proceeds through the entire process outlined above, it is called a “full investigation.” Cases can be closed without being fully investigated for one of two reasons: either they are truncated or they are settled by mediation. Truncated cases still must be forwarded to a board panel before being closed.

Truncated Case Closures

Truncated case closures are those in which an investigation is terminated before the investigative process can be completed. A case is truncated for one of three reasons: either the complainant and/or the alleged victim(s) withdraws the complaint (categorized as “complaint withdrawn”), the complainant and/or alleged victim(s) is never located (categorized as “complainant/victim unavailable”), or the complainant or alleged victim(s) is unwilling to give a formal statement (categorized as “complainant/victim uncooperative.”)

In order to close a case as “complaint withdrawn,” an investigator must obtain a statement that the complainant (or in some instances the alleged victim) wishes to withdraw the complaint. The investigator tape-records the statement and sends a withdrawal form to be completed and signed. If the withdrawal form is returned, the case will be forwarded to a board panel to be closed as withdrawn. If the withdrawal form is not returned, the team manager must listen to the tape-recorded statement to confirm that the complaint was withdrawn willingly before it is submitted to the board panel.

In order to close a case as “complainant/victim unavailable,” an investigator must send at least two letters (mailed at least one week apart) and make at minimum five phone calls (spaced out at different times of day over a period of at least two weeks) to the best known contact location for the complainant and/or the alleged victim(s). Should this process lead to a new address or phone number, the investigator must begin the process again with the up-to-date information. Ten days after the final contact attempt has been made without response, the investigator may send the case to a board panel to be truncated.

A complaint can be closed as “complainant/victim uncooperative” for one of two reasons: either the complainant or alleged victim(s) has refused to cooperate after being contacted by the CCRB, or the complainant or alleged victim(s) has not responded to CCRB contact, even though the address and phone number the CCRB is using is deemed accurate. Should the complainant or alleged victim(s) contact the agency after the case has been truncated, the case may be re-opened for full investigation.

Alternative Dispute Resolution

When team management, in reviewing a case, finds that a complaint is eligible for mediation, it will instruct the investigator to offer mediation to the complainant as an alternative to investigation. Complaints eligible for mediation include all those involving allegations of discourtesy and offensive language, use of minor physical force without injury, threat of arrest or summons, threat of force, and stop, question and frisk incidents that do not result in an arrest. Both the complainant and the subject officer must voluntarily agree to mediation. What occurs during the mediation session is confidential and cannot be used in any future judicial or administrative proceeding. If the mediation is not successful for any reason, the complainant has the right to request that his or her complaint be investigated.

The goal of mediation is to have the complainant and the subject officer meet in the presence of a trained, neutral mediator to address the issues raised by the complaint. Mediators are not judges, so they cannot rule on the merits of a complaint. Their task is to help disputing parties resolve the issues between them.

Cases are closed as “mediation attempted” when the complainant and the police officer agreed to mediate but the former either failed to appear for the scheduled mediation twice without good cause, or failed to respond to phone calls and letters to set up such a session.

Since July 2001, the CCRB has enhanced investigators’ mediation training and instructional materials, and has made new requirements of investigative staff regarding mediation: they must offer the complainant the opportunity to mediate in all suitable cases, and refer all cases in which the complainant has agreed to mediate to the Mediation Unit. Since the mediation program was initiated in 1997, it has grown steadily, and is now by far the largest program of its kind nationwide.

Board Panels

Cases that have been fully investigated or truncated are forwarded to the Case Management Unit (CMU). Each month, CMU assigns these cases to board panels, made up of three board members. Panels consist of one board member designated by the mayor, one city council designee, and one police commissioner designee. Panel members discuss each case forwarded for review and vote on a disposition for every allegation. They may substantiate any allegation of misconduct within a complaint by a two-to-one vote. If a panel substantiates any allegation in a case, the case is sent to the police commissioner. If the panel cannot come to a decision on one or more allegations, it may forward the case to the full board for a vote. Board panels review both truncated and fully investigated cases. The

Findings on the Merits

Substantiated: There is a sufficient credible evidence to believe that the subject officer committed the act charged in the allegation and committed misconduct. The board can recommend to the police commissioner appropriate disciplinary action.

Exonerated: The subject officer was found to have committed the act alleged, but the subject officer’s actions were determined to be lawful and proper.

Unfounded: There is sufficient credible evidence to believe that the subject officer did not commit the alleged act of misconduct.

Other Findings

Unsubstantiated: The weight of available evidence is insufficient to substantiate, exonerate or unfound the allegation.

Miscellaneous: The subject of the allegation is no longer a member of the New York City Police Department.

CCRB Findings

In determining the finding for an allegation, the board uses the preponderance of the evidence as its standard of proof. This standard, the same one used at administrative disciplinary hearings and in civil court cases, requires the board to adopt the disposition favored by the weight of the evidence. In compliance with section 440 of the city charter, the board may not make any finding or recommendation “based solely on an unsworn complaint or statement” or use as a basis for recommendation “prior unsubstantiated, unfounded or withdrawn complaints.” The board notifies the parties to a complaint of its findings and recommendations by letter.

Substantiated, exonerated, or unfounded dispositions are considered “findings on the merits” because they reflect the CCRB’s decision on the validity of the complaint. Unsubstantiated outcomes, cases where the police officer was never identified, and miscellaneous closures (usually when the officer is no longer a member of the New York City Police Department) do not constitute findings on the merits, since the allegations remain unresolved. The rate at which the board makes findings on the merits of allegations after conducting a full investigation is the clearest quantitative measure of the effectiveness of investigations carried out by the CCRB staff, because the board can make such findings only if the investigation provides sufficient evidence to allow the board to reach a factual conclusion.

The board can make different findings on different allegations within the same complaint. For example, if a complainant alleges that an officer used excessive force to effect a retaliatory arrest (an arrest made without probable cause and in bad faith), the board may find that the arrest was legal, but that the force was nevertheless excessive. The allegation of excessive force would then be substantiated, while the claim of retaliatory arrest would be exonerated; the case would be counted as a substantiated case, since an allegation was substantiated. The CCRB reports both on the case dispositions (Table 24A, Appendix C) and the dispositions of all allegations following full investigations (Table 24B, Appendix C).

The board may also determine to recommend that misconduct other than a FADO allegation was uncovered during the investigation of a complaint; this misconduct generally consists of an officer either intentionally making a false statement to the CCRB or failing to file required paperwork. In these instances, board panels may refer their determinations of other misconduct not only to the police commissioner but also to various other law enforcement entities. Of particular note are cases where the board determines to recommend that an officer intentionally made a false official statement to the CCRB. A CCRB interview is considered an administrative proceeding and according to Interim Order 4/2005 (modifying Patrol Guide procedure 203-08), at such a proceeding “making a false official statement regarding a material matter will result in dismissal from this [d]epartment, absent exceptional circumstances.”

CCRB Disciplinary Recommendations

Under New York State Civil Service Law, officers who are subjects of CCRB investigations must be disciplined or served with disciplinary charges within 18 months of the date of the incident. The only exception to the statute of limitations occurs when the alleged misconduct committed by the officer constitutes a crime. While only the police commissioner is authorized to mete out punishment for misconduct, the board can make one of three recommendations when forwarding a substantiated case to him.

Instructions

“Instructions” involve a subject officer’s commanding officer or a member of the department’s Legal Bureau instructing him or her on the proper procedures with respect to the substantiated allegations. They can also involve an officer being sent for in-service training or Police Academy presentations. Instructions are considered the least punitive disciplinary measure because they do not result in formal proceedings, though the department's imposition of instructions is noted in the officer's CCRB history.

Command Discipline

A "command discipline" is imposed directly by the subject officer's commanding officer and may vary based on the seriousness of the misconduct, the officer's disciplinary history, and the officer's performance record. The penalties associated with command discipline range from an oral warning and admonishment to a forfeiture of up to 10 days of vacation or accrued time.

Charges and Specifications

The most serious disciplinary measure is "charges and specifications." This involves lodging formal administrative charges against the subject officer who, as a result, may face loss of vacation time, suspension, or termination from the police department.

New York Police Department Disciplinary Process

When the board substantiates one or more allegations raised by a complaint, it forwards the case to the police commissioner for his consideration and final decision. Responsibility for imposing discipline within the police department rests solely with the police commissioner, who can still make new findings of law and fact even after the CCRB and an administrative law judge determine the police officer committed misconduct. In such cases, the police commissioner must explain his findings in writing. A police officer can appeal the final adverse decisions of the police commissioner to New York State Supreme Court.

Cases in which charges are served against an officer are filed with the department's deputy commissioner for trials (DCT). The deputy commissioner for trials and his assistants, who are administrative law judges employed by the police department, preside over case conferences, negotiations, and hearings. Until January 2003, some substantiated cases were calendared at the Office of Administrative Trials and Hearings (OATH), an independent city tribunal. Following the First

Department Appellate Division's decision in Lynch v. Giuliani, all CCRB substantiated cases are now filed with the department's deputy commissioner for trials.

Because the police commissioner is responsible for deciding whether to impose discipline against individuals, the police department considers each subject officer the CCRB found committed misconduct to be a single case. Therefore, a single CCRB case may be reflected as two or more cases after it has been forwarded to the police commissioner, resulting in more total cases at the police department than the CCRB forwarded. The police department regularly reports to the CCRB on the final disposition of cases resolved by the commissioner's office during the prior month.

If a case contains no substantiated allegations but the board determines to recommend that other misconduct occurred, the CCRB also forwards the case to the police department. In these instances, the police department has not notified the CCRB of the action it takes, if any, against officers whom the board determined to recommend engaged in misconduct.

Outreach

The Outreach Unit is tasked with the goal of educating the public and police officers about the CCRB, as required by the New York City Charter. With the agency focusing its resources on the Investigations Division, the staff of the Outreach Unit shrank from four employees in 2004 to two in 2005. Nevertheless, the unit continued to be productive, conducting 80 public informational meetings. While this is down from the 99 meetings conducted in 2004 and 92 in 2003, it compares favorably with the 76 conducted in 2002 with a larger staff.

The Outreach Unit meets with college and high school classes, community boards, precinct community councils, community organizations, and police department personnel. In these meetings, members of the Outreach Unit outline the mission and structure of the agency; when meeting with the public, they give advice on how to act in police encounters and provide information on how to file a complaint if a civilian believes he or she is a victim of misconduct.

Of particular note in 2005 are a series of meetings the Outreach Unit conducted with officers assigned to Police Service Area (PSA) 2, a Brooklyn housing command. From January through August 2005, PSA-2 led all Housing

CCRB INVESTIGATION:

Detective Unlawfully Frisked and Searched 13 Year-old Autistic Boy

At 5:50 p.m. on February 29, 2004, a 24 year-old woman was sitting at a picnic table in St. Albans Park in Queens with her 13 year-old, non-verbal, autistic brother. The woman was talking on her cell phone while her younger brother read a magazine. Two narcotics detectives (one male and one female) claimed that they saw the boy with his hands under the picnic table, and suspected that he might be rolling a marijuana cigarette. The officers pulled into the park in an unmarked gray Pontiac and approached the two civilians. The female detective stood by the woman and told her not to move, while the male detective ordered the autistic boy to put his hands on his head.

When the boy did not comply, his sister informed the officers that the boy was autistic; she feared that he could make a sudden movement, as he is prone to do, and startle the officers. The male detective frisked and then searched the boy. While the two detectives were interacting with the brother and sister, two other unmarked police vehicles, one of which was a van carrying several individuals the narcotics team had previously arrested earlier that afternoon, arrived in the park. The detectives did not find any evidence that the autistic boy or his sister possessed marijuana, and proceeded to leave. The woman asked the officers what precinct they were from, and they told her that they were from the 113th. The officers provided no explanation as to why they stopped the woman and searched the boy. After the incident, the woman drove her brother home, proceeded to the precinct, and obtained a complaint form, which her mother submitted later at another precinct. The CCRB took a statement from the woman, though due to his autism the boy could not be interviewed.

Although police commands' responses to CCRB records requests provided no indication that police had filed a stop, question, and frisk report in connection with the incident, the CCRB investigator identified the narcotics officers through the use of the police department arrest database. Arrest records showed that a specific team of narcotics officers had made several arrests in the vicinity of St. Albans Park on the same afternoon as the brother's and sister's encounter with police. Upon being interviewed, the team of narcotics detectives admitted that their team interacted with the brother and sister. Yet the male and female detectives who first arrived on the scene denied frisking and searching the boy or detaining the woman. These detectives' colleagues denied seeing any officer frisk and search the boy. Although accounts differed slightly, the first two detectives both stated that seeing the boy fidgeting with his hands under the picnic table had aroused their suspicion. They claimed that they had approached the siblings, but upon seeing that there were no drugs in the boy's hand or on the ground around the pair, they left without incident.

The investigator, however, again through the use of the police department arrest database, was able to identify and interview one of the individuals inside the prisoner van that entered St. Albans Park. When asked to describe what had happened in the park this man gave an account, without prompting, that corroborated the fundamental portions of the woman's story—that an officer had frisked and searched her brother, whom the man described as “mentally slow.”

The woman's testimony, combined with the confirmation of an independent witness, proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the male and female detective stopped the siblings and that the male detective frisked and searched the autistic boy without legal justification. On November 9, 2004, the board substantiated these allegations and recommended that the department serve disciplinary charges against the officers. It further recommended that the department discipline the two officers for failing to prepare a stop, question, and frisk report as required by the NYPD Patrol Guide. In July of 2005, the police department ordered that both officers receive instructions, or retraining, on the law and departmental guidelines applicable to stop, question, frisk, and search procedures.

Bureau commands in complaints with 39 complaints. This number represented an average of 4.9 complaints per month, and was nearly double the 21 complaints received by PSA-6, the housing command with the next-highest number of complaints. The training sergeant at PSA-2 contacted the CCRB Outreach Unit and asked the unit to conduct training sessions with PSA-2 officers in an attempt to reduce the number of complaints civilians were filing against PSA-2 officers. After the CCRB Outreach Unit met with officers at PSA-2 on August 24 and September 2, the complaint rate at the precinct immediately began to decline. In September of 2005, a below-average four complaints were filed against PSA-2 officers, and in the last three months of the year, the command received a total of only four complaints. The CCRB Outreach Unit conducted a follow-up meeting with new officers on November 17, and continues to meet with officers in the command. The eight total complaints filed against officers at PSA-2 from September to December dropped the command from first to fifth out of the nine Housing Bureau commands.

In addition, the Outreach Unit is charged with producing a status report on agency operations and activity twice a year. In 2005, the unit dramatically revised the mid-year status report. The resulting 20-page color report made information about the CCRB and its operations available to a broad audience, and also highlighted major trends in complaint filings, agency performance, and complaint dispositions. While the mid-year report did not contain the same level of detail as the agency's year-end report, the current report and future year-end reports will continue to include this data in the appendices.

Strip-search Recommendation Update

On May 12, 2004 the CCRB requested that the NYPD enhance its training of officers, particularly supervisors, to ensure that they adhere to Patrol Guide strip-search procedures. The CCRB made this recommendation after a study of sixteen substantiated complaints showed that many officers lacked a full understanding of what constitutes a strip search and when one can be conducted. During interviews with investigators, some officers did not recognize the searches they conducted to be strip searches, and others believed strip searches were proper in situations where they were not.

CCRB's Personnel Unit: Rosa Alvarado, Ellen Diner, Madge Miller, and Beth Thompson (seated)

When the CCRB released its recommendation, the police department issued a directive regarding proper procedures for conducting strip searches that was read at ten consecutive roll calls at each command. The department also issued a statement that it was developing a training video for officers on proper strip-search procedures. To date, however, the department has not completed the training video or altered its training procedures.

Budget and Headcount

In order to respond to the 47% increase in the number of complaints filed annually since 2002, the agency has asked for more than $1 million to be permanently added to its budget. Instead it has received supplemental, single-year funding in the last three adopted budgets. In each of the past three years, the New York City Council has proposed and the administration has accepted adding $1 million to the CCRB's adopted budget for a single fiscal year, enabling the CCRB to hire 24 investigators during that fiscal year. While this funding has allowed the CCRB to avoid being overwhelmed by unprecedented numbers of complaints, it does not provide the agency with the most efficient means of tackling its growing docket. The final budget for fiscal year 2005 (July 1, 2004, to June 30, 2005) was $9,734,146. At the end of 2005, the fiscal year 2006 (July 1, 2005, to June 30, 2006) budget stood at $10,159,194 (including $68,855 in grant funding from the state). Since this includes money that was added to the budget for a single year, as of December 31, 2005, the financial plan for the CCRB's fiscal year 2007 and out-year budgets calls for total funding of just $8,909,014 and an authorized headcount of 24 fewer employees.

The CCRB's fiscal year 2005 budget supported a headcount of 185; on June 30, 2005, the CCRB employed 179 full-time employees. As of December 31, 2005, the CCRB's fiscal year 2006 budget authorized 184 positions: 146 investigators and 38 administrative staff members. At year's end the CCRB had a full-time headcount of 173 employees, including two on leave and one who resigned but remained on payroll. Of the actively working staff, 135 were investigators and 35 were non-investigative staff members (including executive, administrative, outreach and mediation staff).

Board Membership

In March 2005, Mayor Bloomberg appointed Dr. Mohammad Khalid to serve on the board. Dr. Khalid is a mayoral designee, filling a seat that had been vacant since Tai Park resigned in December of 2003.

Dr. Khalid has worked as a dentist in Staten Island since 1977. An active member of the Staten Island community, Dr. Khalid is president of the Iron Hill Civic Association of Staten Island and of the Pakistani Civic Association of Staten Island, the vice-chairman of the Children's Campaign Fund of Staten Island, and the first vice-president and a member of the board of directors of Friends for Hospice Care of Staten Island.

In 2003 Dr. Khalid served as a member of the New York City Charter Revision Commission, which reviewed the entire city charter, held hearings in all five boroughs to solicit public input, and issued recommendations to amend the charter to reflect New York City's constantly evolving economic, social and political environment. In 2004 Dr. Khalid was the recipient of the Pakistan League of America Community and Leadership Award and in 2003 received the Governor George E. Pataki Excellence Award for community service on behalf of New York State.

COMPLAINT ACTIVITY

Number of Complaints and Allegations

The CCRB received 6,796 complaints in 2005, 600 more than the 6,196 received in 2004. (See Table 1A, Appendix A.) This represents an increase of 10%, lower than the 12% increase from 2003 to 2004 and the 21% increase the previous year, but still substantial—particularly in light of the cumulative effects of steadily increasing complaints. The complaint rate has risen in each of the past five years: the number of complaints filed in 2005 was 60% higher than the 4,251 filed in 2001. (See Table 1A, Appendix A.)

Throughout the reporting period, citizens have increasingly contacted the CCRB directly to file complaints of alleged police misconduct. In 2001, the public filed only 41% of all complaints directly with the CCRB, while lodging 59% first with the NYPD, which then referred them to the CCRB. In 2005, by contrast, 68% of complaints came directly to the agency and only 32% were referred to the CCRB by the NYPD. (See Table 6, Appendix A.) 311 telephone calls routed to the CCRB are counted as complaints filed directly with the CCRB.

For the last five years New Yorkers' preferred method for filing CCRB complaints has been by telephone. Of the complaints filed either directly with the CCRB or first with the NYPD in 2005, citizens lodged 90% by telephone. Complaints lodged through the internet increased in absolute terms over the five years covered in this report, but comprised just 4% of all complaints filed in 2005, while the proportion of complaints filed in person and by letter has consistently decreased from 2001 through 2005. (See Table 7A and 7B, Appendix A.)

Characteristics of Allegations

As the number of complaints has risen over the past five years, the total number of allegations raised by these complaints has gone up as well. In the 6,796 complaints filed in 2005, civilians made a total of 21,359 allegations of police misconduct. This constitutes an increase of 95% over the 11,379 in 2001, and 22% more than the 17,559 in 2004. (See Table 1A, Appendix A.)

While the annual percentage of allegations within the abuse of authority category has increased over the last five years, the relative proportions of force and discourtesy allegations have slightly decreased. In 2001, the abuse of authority category accounted for 43% of all allegations, growing to 50% in 2004 and to 52% in 2005. (See Table 1A, Appendix A.) Meanwhile, force allegations fell from 34% of all allegations in 2001 to 29% in 2005. Similarly, discourtesy allegations made up around 20% of all allegations between 2001 and 2003, but only 17% in 2005. (See Table 1A, Appendix A.) At the same time, the proportion of complaints in which force, abuse of authority, discourtesy, and offensive language allegations are made has, since 2001, been extremely consistent. In 2005, 50% of the 6,796 complaints filed by citizens included an allegation of improper use of force, 68% abuse of authority, 42% discourtesy, and 7% an allegation of offensive language. (Table 1B, Appendix A.)

During the five-year reporting period, the proportion of specific allegations within the force, abuse of authority, discourtesy, and offensive language categories has also remained remarkably steady. Consistent with past years, the most frequently filed allegations in 2005 were improper use of physical/bodily force (4,442 allegations), use of discourteous words (2,978 allegations), question and/or stopped (2,244 allegations), threat of arrest (1,267 allegations), and improper search (1,112 allegations). (See Tables 2-4, Appendix A.)

Within the force category, the 4,442 allegations of physical force, which include all instances of an officer using his or her own bodily force, such as dragging, pulling, pushing, shoving, throwing, punching, kicking, kneeing, slapping and/or biting an individual, accounted for 71% of total force allegations. The use of physical (bodily) force has accounted for between 69% and 74% of total force allegations throughout the five-year reporting period. Of all force allegations, the next two most frequently lodged—gun pointed and pepper spray—have regularly each made up approximately 6%.

The proportionate share of individual allegations within the abuse of authority category has not significantly varied over time. For example, the allegation that an officer refused to divulge his or her name and/or shield number remained within the 9% to 12% range throughout the five-year period while increasing in absolute terms from 468 allegations (10%) in 2001 to 1,010 allegations (9%) in 2005. The only abuse of authority allegation that has substantially increased from 2001 through 2005 is that an officer improperly questioned and/or stopped a civilian. Allegations that an officer improperly questioned and/or stopped a civilian have increased from 399 (or 8% of all abuse of authority allegations) in 2001 to 2,244 (or 20%) in 2005. This is a 462% increase over the last five years and a 55% increase over the 1,445 times this allegation was lodged in 2004, when it became the most frequently lodged allegation within the abuse of authority category. (See Table 3, Appendix A.)

Location of Incidents Resulting in Complaints

Tables 13A through 13E, in Appendix A, show the number of incidents in each precinct in the city that led to a complaint over the last five years. Officers often operate within the confines of multiple precincts, however, and it does not necessarily follow that each incident that took place within the borders of a precinct involved officers assigned to that precinct. In order to track complaint locations, the city is broken down first into the five boroughs, then into the eight patrol boroughs (where Manhattan, Brooklyn, and Queens are each divided in half), and within the patrol boroughs into individual precincts.

The proportionate share per borough of incidents that led to a complaint has remained consistent over time, with the exception of Manhattan, where incidents leading to complaints fell from 27% of all complaints (1,702 total complaints) in 2004 to 24% (1600 complaints) in 2005. This decrease was caused mostly by the fall in complaints in Manhattan South from 876 in 2004 to 734 in 2005 during a period when complaints rose citywide, and may be attributable, in part, to the 63 complaints stemming from the Republican National Convention filed in 2004.

As was the case in every year since 2001, the largest share of complaints in 2005 (34%) were filed about incidents in Brooklyn (2,331 total complaints). In 2004, Brooklyn's share was 31%, and in 2003 it was 32%. Manhattan was second, as described above, followed by the Bronx at 21% (1,416 total), up marginally from 20% in 2004. Incidents in Queens led to 16% of total complaints (1,098 total) and precipitated 16% of all complaints in each year from 2001 to 2005. Staten Island accounted for 3% (223 complaints), as it did last year. (See Tables 13A through 13E, Appendix A.)

While the percentage of complaints attributable to each borough has remained constant, within the geographic confines of certain precincts the number of incidents leading to complaints changed considerably during the reporting period. The number of these incidents that occurred within Brooklyn North's 75th Precinct, for example, continued to outpace the increase in complaints overall, rising from 168 complaints in 2003 to 228 in 2004 and to 299 in 2005. This increase ensured that for the second consecutive year, the highest number of incidents leading to complaints citywide occurred within the 75th Precinct. The 73rd Precinct, also in Brooklyn North, was second with 224 complaints in 2005, a 75% jump from the 128 it incurred the previous year. In the Bronx, the number of incidents occurring in 44th Precinct that generated complaints also continued climbing, to 203 in 2005. Fourth in this list was the 67th Precinct in Brooklyn South: over the past five years, respectively, 109, 117, 132, 170, and 197 complaint incidents occurred within its confines. Notable for reversing its rising complaint rate is Manhattan's Midtown South, where 130 complaint incidents occurred in 2002, 177 in 2003, and 206 in 2004, but only 179 in 2005.

CCRB INVESTIGATION

Officers Used a Reasonable Amount of Force to Restrain Emotionally Disturbed Man

On February 17, 2004, a mother had an argument with her 19 year-old son about smoking marijuana in their apartment in the Bronx. The man left the apartment, went to a park across the street, and slashed his wrists with a folding switchblade. After about an hour, the son returned on his own accord; his mother refused to let him in the apartment but called 911, since the man's slashed wrists were bleeding. The 911 operator dispatched an ambulance.

When paramedics arrived on the second floor, the man was sitting in front of the door to the apartment, bleeding. As they approached him, his mother came out of the apartment and told the paramedics that she refused to let her son inside the apartment because he had stopped taking his medication, was acting violently, and had been cutting his arms with a knife. The paramedics followed procedure when dealing with people who may be armed and called for police assistance.

One paramedic met the officers downstairs when they arrived and informed them that the man had a knife. The officers went upstairs and asked the man to stand up so that he could be frisked for weapons. The man did not respond, so one of the officers tried to make the man stand up by pulling on his left arm. The man then began swinging at the officers, and both the officers and the paramedics tried to control him. One of the paramedics spotted a partially open folding knife in the man's right hand and yelled, "Knife! He's got a knife!"

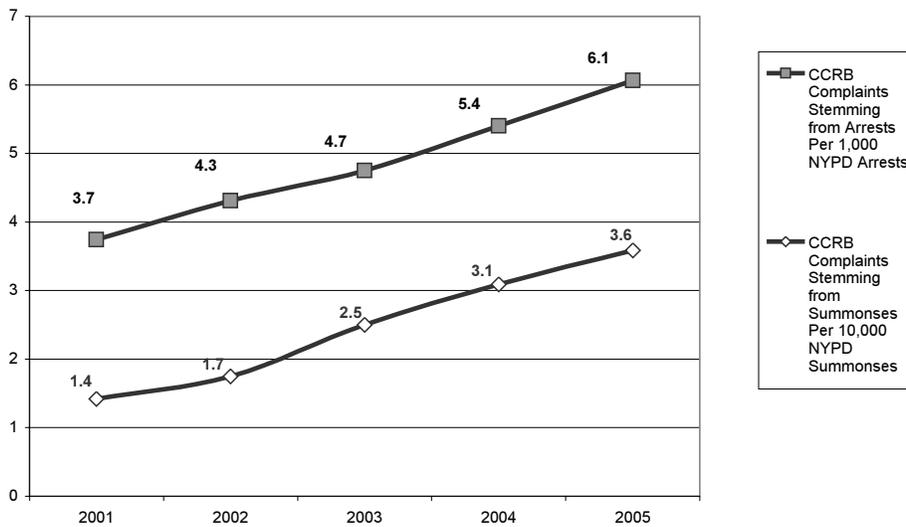

The officers shouted at the man to drop his knife; he continued to swing at the officers and the paramedics. The officers continued to struggle with the man to disarm him, and both officers punched him in an effort to handcuff him. The officers were able to knock the knife out of the man's hand, but the man continued to swing at the officers. The officers then pushed the man down on the ground and handcuffed him. The man banged his head on the floor, either as a result of being pushed to the ground or from the ongoing struggle. He was restrained in a stretcher and taken to St. Barnabus Hospital. From St. Barnabus Hospital, the man was transferred to Bellevue Hospital for psychiatric treatment, where he was hospitalized for several weeks.

While hospitalized, the man informed his pastor about the incident and the pastor called the Internal Affairs Bureau (IAB) on February 27, 2004. IAB notified the CCRB of the complaint on March 3, 2004; the CCRB interviewed the man and the man's mother on April 1, 2004. The man stated that when the officers arrived, he had forgotten he had the knife in his pocket, and that the officers had thrown him against the wall and punched him before slamming him on the ground and kicking his face after he was handcuffed. He alleged that he had suffered a broken jaw and cuts to his face. On April 23, 2004, the man filed a notice of claim announcing his intent to file a lawsuit seeking $10 million from New York City.

The medical records the CCRB obtained showed that the man had exaggerated the extent of his injuries. The diagnostic x-ray from St. Barnabus noted "no evidence of acute fracture or dislocation." The medical records revealed that the man had cuts on his wrists, a left wrist sprain, and bruising around his left eye consistent with banging his head during the struggle. The lead paramedic corroborated the officers' account of the incident, stating that the man had tried to punch the officers, with the knife out, when he was taken to the ground. The paramedic further confirmed that no officer had punched or kicked the man once he was in handcuffs. When interviewed, the officers admitted that they used force in the struggle, and both officers acknowledged punching the man in an attempt to disarm and handcuff him.

When confronting a violent man in possession of a weapon, officers are allowed to use appropriate force to disarm the man and effect an arrest. On April 14, 2005, the board determined that the physical (bodily) force the officers used was appropriate given the circumstances and closed the allegations as exonerated.

Figure 2: Number of CCRB Complaints Stemming from an Arrest or Summons per 1,000 Arrests and per 10,000 Summonses 2001-2005

Again, the drop in 2005 may be partially attributable to the number of complaint incidents that took place in 2004 during the Republican National Convention. (See Tables 13A through 13E, Appendix A.)

Arrests and Summonses

The percentage of alleged victims who received a summons or were arrested as a result of the incident that led to a complaint has remained virtually unchanged over time. In complaints filed during 2005, 52% of alleged victims were either arrested (32%) or issued a summons (20%), while 48% of alleged victims were neither arrested nor issued a summons. Although there has been an increase since 2001 in the percentage of alleged victims who were issued a summons (16% in 2001) and a slight decrease in the percentage who were neither arrested nor issued a summons (54% in 2001), the changes have been gradual over time, and the ratios have always been within a couple of percentage points of the previous year.

Combined with data on the total number of arrests made and summonses issued by New York City Police Department officers, CCRB data can show how frequently someone arrested or given a summons files a complaint. The department made 352,626 arrests in 2005; 2,139 of these people filed a CCRB complaint or had one filed on their behalf. This means that one in every 165 arrested individuals eventually filed a CCRB complaint or had one filed on his or her behalf. NYPD officers issued a total of 3,585,301 summonses in 2005, and 1,285 alleged victims in CCRB complaints had received a summons in 2005. Since many summonses (parking summonses being the most obvious example) are issued with no interaction between the officer and the civilian, the resulting ratio of 2,790 summonses per CCRB complaint does not reflect the relationship as accurately as the arrest figures do, but can still serve as a useful guideline.

Although NYPD arrests have increased over the last five years, the increase in the number of arrests has not been as dramatic as the increase in CCRB complaints. The number of summonses that NYPD officers issued actually decreased since CCRB complaint rates began rising, showing that increases in the number of arrests and summonses have not fueled CCRB complaint increases. In 2005, the police department made 6% more arrests than in 2002 (352,626 as opposed to 333,969), and officers issued 15% fewer summonses (3,585,301, down from 4,215,452). As Figure 2 shows, in 2001 1.4 of every 10,000 people issued a summons and 3.7 of every 1,000 people arrested eventually filed a CCRB complaint or had one filed on their behalf. Over the last five years, the proportion of individuals filing complaints as a result of summonses and arrests has steadily increased, more than doubling in the case of summonses and nearly doubling in the case of arrests. The relationship between arrests, summonses, and CCRB complaints does not therefore appear to be correlated; while the proportion of CCRB complainants who have been arrested has remained fairly constant, the proportion of those arrested who file complaints has not.

Characteristics of Alleged Victims in Complaints Filed

The historical uniformity of the characteristics of alleged victims in complaints filed—their race, gender and age—is almost startling.

Over the past five years, blacks have been overrepresented and whites underrepresented, by large and consistent margins, as alleged victims of police misconduct in CCRB complaints. Blacks constituted 54% of alleged victims in 2005 complaints, mirroring the 53% average of all alleged victims they have comprised since 2001. This percentage is substantially higher than the 25% of the New York City population that is black. (See Table 8, Appendix A.) Whites represented 15% of alleged victims, a figure far lower than the 35% share they constitute of the New York City's population. Asians continued to be underrepresented among alleged victims; they made up only 3% of the alleged victims in 2005 but 10% of New York City's population.

The percentage of alleged victims identified as Latino is generally consistent with the Latino makeup of New York City. Latinos comprised 25% of the alleged victims in both 2005 and from 2001 through 2005, while the Latino percentage of New York City's population stands at 27%. As of February 2, 2006, the CCRB was unable to determine the race of 2,918 alleged victims whose complaints were filed in 2005, primarily because the alleged victims refused to provide a statement or reliable contact information, or their complaints were filed so late in the year that investigators had not yet had the opportunity to obtain information pertaining to the alleged victims' race. (See Table 8, Appendix A.)

In comparison to the city's population, a disproportionate percentage of the alleged victims of CCRB complaints are male and young. In 2005, 32% of the alleged victims of CCRB complaints were between 15 and 24, an age bracket that makes up only 14% of all New Yorkers. (See Table 12, Appendix A.) In addition, 68% of the alleged victims were male, substantially higher than the 47% of the city's population that is male. (See Table 10, Appendix A.) These statistics have not varied over time. From 2001 through 2005, 32% of the alleged victims were between the ages of 15 and 24 and 68% were male, percentages that are identical to those of 2005. (See Table 10 and Table 12, Appendix A, and Figure 3.)

Characteristics of Subject Officers

The race and gender of officers against whom complaints were filed in 2005 resembles the demographics of the department as a whole. Of those subject officers whose race the agency was able to determine, 57% were white, 16% were black, 23% were Latino, and 3% were Asian; none of these ratios varies by more than 0.4% from the racial composition of the department. Where these ratios have changed over time, the changes have been consistent with changes in the department's own makeup. For example, 68% of officers who had a complaint filed against them in 2001 were white, a year in which the department was 65% white. (See Table 9, Appendix A.) Ninety percent of the officers against whom complaints were filed in 2005 were men, slightly higher than the 83% of the members of the department who are men. Male officers have been similarly overrepresented among the officers who have complaints filed against them in each of the past five years. (See Table 11, Appendix A.)

Assignment of Subject Officers

Table 14, Appendix A, depicts the number of officers against whom a complaint was filed based on the subject officers' command assignments. If a complaint names multiple subject officers assigned to different commands, each command is credited with a complaint. If a complaint names multiple subject officers assigned to a single command, the command is credited with one complaint. The total number of complaints attributable to commands listed in Table 14 (7,841 in 2005) is thus higher than the total num-

CCRB INVESTIGATION:

Officer Exhibited Remarkable Courtesy and Professionalism in the Face of a Civilian's Barrage of Insults

At 2:40 p.m. on March 4, 2005, a police officer approached a car that was illegally standing in a bus stop, and issued the driver, a 52 year-old woman, a summons. The woman did not believe she deserved the summons and argued with the officer. The woman subsequently filed a complaint with the CCRB. During her interview with the assigned investigator, the woman said she did not deserve the summons because she was simply waiting to return to the flow of traffic after being beaten to a parking space in front of the bus stop. She claimed the officer had spoken discourteously to her, called her stupid, and that when she requested his name and badge number, he shoved his badge in her face.

Assigned to work alone policing traffic and parking offenses, the officer informed the CCRB investigator that he uses a digital recorder to document his interactions with members of public to whom he issues summonses. The recording he made of this incident, which the officer provided to the investigator upon being interviewed, allowed the CCRB to construct the exact details of the verbal interaction, in which the woman, not the officer, was discourteous and threatening.

When the officer approached the car, the woman immediately stated, "I'm not in the bus stop."

The officer replied, "You're in the Q5 bus stop, ma'am."

The woman answered, "No, I'm not."

The woman argued that because she wasn't "parked" she shouldn't get a ticket; the officer explained that the law makes it unlawful to "stand" in the bus stop. The woman became agitated and asked for the officer's name, which he provided. She asked him to spell it and he did. She spelled it back to him, and added, "Yeah, you will hear from me.... I see why things happen to you folks."

The officer asked her, "Why is that?" and she resumed her argument, asserting, "I was not parked in the bus stop."

"Does that say bus stop, ma'am?" the officer asked.

"I was not parked! Do you understand that? Do you understand I was not parked? What part of it do you not understand?... You're being totally ridiculous!"

"Ma'am, your vehicle is in a bus stop right now."

"I was never parked here! No!"

"It [the parking sign] says 'no standing.'"

The argument continued for some time. The officer gave the summons to the woman, who finally said, "I'm not in the mood for you and your mess."

"Thank you for ... your statement," the officer concluded. "Have a nice day."

The woman then started to curse, screaming, "You are a Goddamned phony, you bony-assed motherfucker.... You can tape it."

The officer remained calm, and stopped traffic so the woman could leave, stating, "Can you move it out? Go ahead, ma'am. I'm stopping traffic to allow you to get out."

The woman did not move the car, yelling instead: "You're a stupid motherfucker! You stupid son of a bitch! I hope you die right now. You stupid son of a bitch! You stupid motherfucker."

"Okay," the officer said.

"You look like a Goddamned hobo." The audio recording at that point chronicled the sound of tires squealing.

The recording proved that the officer never told the woman that she was stupid, and that he politely provided his name to her. In fact, the officer spoke to the woman calmly and treated her with respect despite her rude conduct. On September 14, 2005, the board closed the discourtesy allegation the woman had falsely lodged against the officer as "unfounded."

ber of 2005 complaints (6,796). By the end of 2005, the CCRB had identified 4,099 of these subject commands, allowing the agency to attribute the complaint to a command assignment. The table breaks down the police department by bureau, and further divides the Patrol Service Bureau into patrol boroughs and its other divisions. Nevertheless, the number of undetermined commands makes cross-year comparison difficult except in percentage terms. One trend that can be identified, is that an increasing number of complaints are being filed against officers assigned to the Patrol Services Bureau, which includes the city's 76 precincts and patrol borough anti-crime units. From 2001 through 2005, complaints attributed to commands within the Patrol Services increased by 41% while complaints attributed to commands outside of the Patrol Services Bureau dropped by 10%.

During 2005, 74% of the complaints in which the subject officer(s) was identified were attributable to the Patrol Services Bureau (3,035 out of 4,099), a bit higher than the 71% that they made up in 2004 and the 69% in 2003. Of these 3,035 complaints, Brooklyn North and South and the Bronx each had over 500; this represented an increase for the two Brooklyn patrol boroughs but a decrease for the Bronx. (See Table 14, Appendix A.)

A number of individual precincts featured noteworthy changes in the number of complaints filed against officers assigned to the precincts. In 2004, 106 complaints were filed against officers assigned to the 75th Precinct, a 45% increase from the 73 the precinct received in 2003, and in 2005 the number increased to 117. Other precincts against which the number of complaints filed were among the highest in the city included the 67th Precinct in Brooklyn South (99 complaints) and the 43rd and 46th in the Bronx (81 and 84 complaints, respectively). Two precincts in Brooklyn North experienced noteworthy increases: the number of complaints filed against officers assigned to the 73rd Precinct nearly doubled, from 42 complaints in 2004 to 79 in 2005, while the number filed against officers assigned to the 77th increased from 62 to 82. (See Tables 15A through 15Q, Appendix A.)

Conversely, the number of complaints filed against officers assigned to the 42nd Precinct in the Bronx decreased substantially; the number of complaints filed against officers assigned there dropped from 44 in 2004 to only 17 in 2005. In Manhattan, complaints filed against 9th Precinct officers decreased from 37 in 2004 to 20 last year, and the number filed against officers assigned to the 23rd Precinct fell from 54 to 32. Elsewhere, fewer complaints were filed against officers assigned to the 84th in Brooklyn North (17, down from 36), and the 113th in Queens South (27, down from 51).

Outside of the Patrol Services Bureau, complaints attributable to the Organized Crime Control Bureau, comprised mainly of narcotics units, fell for the fifth straight year despite the 60% increase in citywide complaint rates. During the last five years, the number of complaints attributable to the Organized Crime Control Bureau decreased from 403 to 246, a drop of 39%. (See Tables 14 and 15N, Appendix A.) A number of traffic control divisions also experienced significantly fewer complaints in 2005, notably the Manhattan Task Force, where filings dropped from 53 in 2004 to 31, and Highway District 2, against which complaints decreased from 19 to 4. (See Tables 14 and 15L, Appendix A.) On the other hand, complaints against officers assigned to the Housing Bureau increased for the fifth year in a row and by 48% in these same five years. (See Table 14, Appendix A.)

Command Ranking

The CCRB ranks the complaint activity of precincts and other commands by the number of complaints received per uniformed officer assigned to the command or precinct. While no comparative measure between commands is perfect, this measure compensates for the difference in size between various commands.

With 11 complaints and only 25 officers, Patrol Bureau Manhattan South Anti-crime Unit had the highest ratio of complaints per uniformed officer in 2005. In commands with very few officers, however, a small number of complaints can affect this measure dramatically, thereby making statistical conclusions about small commands unreliable. Patrol Bureau Manhattan South Anti-crime Unit, for example, was ranked 115th in 2004. In any given year, however, patrol borough anti-crime units rank near the top of the list. The anti-crime units, small units that replaced what were formerly called street crime units, stress the prevention of violent crime, with particular emphasis on the apprehension and arrest of those who illegally use or possess guns. In both 2004 and 2005, four of the top ten commands, as measured by complaints per uniformed officer, were anti-crime units. (See Tables 16A and 16B, Appendix A.)

Among larger commands, the 67th Precinct, with 296 officers, still received enough complaints to place 4th in 2005 (second among numbered precincts) and 5th in 2004 (first among numbered precincts.) With 389 officers, the 71st Precinct was first among numbered precincts in 2005 and third overall; in 2004 it was eighth among numbered precincts and 17th overall.

2004 REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION

Overview

Between August 30 and September 2, 2004, the Republican Party held its national convention in New York City. Various groups mobilized marches and demonstrations before and during the convention; the NYPD was called upon to ensure order and provide security for conventioners, protestors, and bystanders. The CCRB eventually received 81 complaints of misconduct stemming from police-civilian encounters related to the convention and the resulting police presence, of which 63 were determined to be within the agency's jurisdiction. This report describes the types of complaints filed stemming from convention-related encounters and the dispositions of all these complaints.

Location of Incidents Leading to CCRB Complaints

Not surprisingly, more complaints, 28, were filed stemming from incidents within the geographic confines of the Midtown South Precinct than any other. The Midtown South Precinct is bordered by 29th Street on the south, 9th Avenue on the west, 45th Street on the north, and Lexington Avenue on the east, and contains Madison Square Garden, site of the convention. The second-highest number of complaints, 14, took place within the confines of the 13th Precinct, which runs from 14th Street to 29th Street east of Seventh Avenue, and east of Lexington Avenue runs north to 30th Street.

The number of complaints stemming from incidents that took place within the 13th Precinct included eight complaints regarding incidents that took place in or near Union Square from 5:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. on August 31. A number of disparate groups had scheduled demonstrations, protests, or marches in Union Square that evening, and there was a substantial police presence. While the complaints from the evening of August 31 are not all tied to a single demonstration or protest, they speak to the volume of protest activity and police-civilian interaction at Union Square that night.

Three incidents did lead to multiple complaints. The Critical Mass bicycle demonstration that occurred on August 27 precipitated five complaints. These complaints took place at various locations along the route of the ride, but all stemmed from interaction between riders and police officers. In addition, four complaints stemmed from an unpermitted march in the afternoon of August 31 at the World Trade Center site; police arrested 227 individuals not long after the march began. The CCRB received three complaints involving four participants in the march whom police arrested and one complaint involving two men who were stopped but ultimately released when they convinced police that they were tourists and not participating in the march.

The largest demonstration of the week, the August 29 march organized by a number of groups under the umbrella organization United For Peace and Justice, whose participants were estimated in the hundreds of thousands, generated just two complaints from march participants. Three other individuals, who were not participating in the march, filed complaints regarding their interactions with officers who were manning barricades closing off access to streets and sidewalks.

Characteristics of Alleged Victims and Subject Officers in Complaints Filed

While the age and gender of alleged victims in convention-related complaints was similar to those of all alleged victims in complaints filed in 2004, a far higher percentage of alleged victims in convention-related complaints were white. Of the 86 alleged victims whose race was known, for example, 72, or 84% were white, substantially higher than both the 18% of all alleged victims in 2004 who were white, and the 35% of New York City's population who are white. The 66% of all alleged victims in convention-related complaints who were male is consistent with the 69% of all alleged victims who were male in 2004 complaints. The 71% of alleged victims who were between the ages of 15 and 34, however, is higher than the 57% of all alleged victims in 2004 in this age bracket.

The ranks of the 41 identified subject officers in complaints stemming from convention-related incidents included a higher proportion of supervisors than the population of the department as a whole. While 63% of all uniformed officers in the department held the rank of police officer in 2004, only 20 of the 41 subject officers (49%) held the rank of police officer. The five lieutenants against whom complaints were lodged represented 12% of the subject officers in these complaints, while only 5% of the officers in the department were lieutenants. And the five subject officers holding the rank of captain or higher (one captain, one deputy inspector, one assistant chief, and two deputy chiefs) comprised 12% of the subject officers, while officers of these ranks made up only 2% of the department. During the convention, higher ranking officers not normally present during street encounters were visibly managing operations at demonstrations, and were the subjects of complaints when it was determined that they ordered arrests about which individuals filed complaints or took other actions for which they were directly responsible.

Characteristics of Allegations

The percentage of force, abuse of authority, discourtesy, and offensive language allegations stemming from incidents relating to the Republican National Convention closely mirror those of all allegations lodged in 2004. Allegations that officers abused their authority made up slightly more than half (76 of 148, or 51%) of all allegations; these allegations made up 50% of all allegations in 2004. Likewise, 35% of the convention-related allegations constituted allegations of excessive force (compared to 30% of all 2004 allegations) and discourtesy and offensive language allegations made up 11% and 3% of the convention-related allegations, comparable to the 18% and 3% of all allegations in 2004.

Dispositions of Complaints and Allegations

The board created a special panel to review convention-related complaints, comprised of a mayoral designee (Chair Hector Gonzalez), a city council designee (William F. Kuntz, II), and a police commissioner designee (Tosano Simonetti). This panel reviewed 55 cases; the full board reviewed the remaining eight. Of these 63 complaints, the board closed 18 because the complainant and/or the alleged victim could not be located or did not pursue the complaint. These truncated cases included ten in which individuals withdrew their complaints, seven in which the complainant or alleged victim refused to cooperate with the investigation, and one case in which the agency did not receive adequate contact information to obtain a statement from the complainant or alleged victim. The willingness of civilians to cooperate with CCRB investigations was much higher in convention-related complaints than in all cases the CCRB closed in 2005 (the year during which most convention-related complaints were closed). The 18 cases closed with a truncated disposition represented just 29% of the 63 convention-related cases, while 56% of all cases closed in 2005 were closed with a truncated disposition.

Of the 45 remaining cases, the CCRB mediated one case and investigated 44 others. The board substantiated one or more allegations in three cases (7%), closed the allegations in 32 cases (73%) primarily as exonerated, unfounded, and/or unsubstantiated, could not identify any of the subject officers in seven (16%), and closed two others (5%) because the subject officers were no longer members of the department.

The three substantiated cases involved officers of three different ranks in three different locations on two days. On Sunday, August 29, a lieutenant ordered a small street theatre group that was performing near the USS Intrepid to disperse, threatening them with arrest if they did not do so. The CCRB found that the group, which had already complied with commands from a sergeant to move and to remove their masks, was breaking no laws and that the lieutenant lacked any legal authority to threaten the arrest. In November 2005, the department informed the CCRB that the lieutenant had retired, so no disciplinary action could be taken. On Tuesday, August 31, near Union Square, a sergeant made an offensive sexist remark to a woman who approached him to ask for information. Though the sergeant denied having any interaction at all with the woman, she provided the sergeant's badge number to a captain on the scene, who recalled interacting with the woman. The department imposed a level A command discipline against this sergeant. The third substantiated case involved a woman arrested for disorderly conduct near Herald Square. A deputy chief had ordered demonstrators to clear the "street" and stop blocking traffic. In response, the woman and her husband moved up against a building, where they were not impeding pedestrian or vehicular traffic. The deputy chief nevertheless ordered that officers arrest the woman and her husband along with demonstrators who had intentionally disobeyed the dispersal order.

The 44 fully investigated cases contained a total of 110 allegations of misconduct, of which the board substantiated a total of four allegations (4%), determined five to be unfounded (5%), and exonerated the officers in 33 (30%). Thus, of the 110 allegations, the board made findings on the merits in 42 allegations, or 38%, much lower than the 65% rate at which the board made findings on the merits in all fully investigated allegations the board resolved in 2005. The board closed 30 of the allegations as unsubstantiated (27%) and could not identify the subject officer of 28 allegations (26%), a substantially higher rate than the 9% at which the agency was unable to identify subject officers of fully investigated allegations in 2005. In demonstration settings, when many officers assigned to multiple precincts are present in a chaotic environment, the agency has traditionally encountered more difficulty in identifying officers than it does in most other complaints. Finally, the board closed ten allegations with a miscellaneous disposition. In five allegations, the subject officer was no longer employed by the police department and in five other allegations reviewed by the entire board, a majority of board members (7) could not agree on the disposition for the respective allegation. (See Figure 4.)

Case Completion Time

The time it took for the agency to complete investigations of complaints stemming from the Republican National Convention far exceeded the average for investigations closed in 2005. In 2005, the board completed full investigations in an average of 294 days (about nine and one-half months) while convention-related full investigations took an average of 418 days, or nearly 14 months to close. The investigations took longer than the average CCRB case for a number of reasons. As with previous complaints involving large-scale events with large numbers of officers and civilians interacting, many more interviews were required to conduct a thorough investigation; tracking down the numerous witnesses to these events was time-consuming. Furthermore, it can be difficult identifying officers when there are a number of officers assigned to the same location from various precincts, as was the case at many of the events that led to convention-related complaints. Finally, in some of the cases, difficulty in obtaining statements from high-ranking officers contributed to delays in the investigative process.

AGENCY PRODUCTIVITY

Performance Measures

Despite a sustained three-year increase in complaint filings, the board continued to improve its productivity by every measurable standard. The board closed more full investigations than it had since 1997, and more total cases than it had in ten years. All the while, the quality of investigations, as measured by the rate at which the board made conclusive determinations about whether misconduct occurred, remained high, and the age of the open docket decreased. Though in the last two years the rate at which the agency increased its productivity (34%) has outpaced the rate at which complaints have increased (22%), the total number of complaints the agency received continued to exceed the number of case closures. As a result, the size of the agency's open docket continued to grow, and the average time to complete an investigation rose as well.

Total Case Closures and Findings on the Merits

The board closed 6,518 total cases in 2005, 12% more than the 5,818 it closed in 2004 and the most it has closed since 1995. The agency completed 2,679 full investigations, representing a 10% increase over the 2,444 full investigations closed in 2004. (See Table 24A, Appendix C.)

Despite the increased productivity, the docket continued to grow in 2005; at year's end the agency had 3,467 open cases on its docket, an 8% increase from the 3,204 cases open on December 31, 2004. (See Table 21, Appendix B.) The average size of the agency's open docket over the course of 2005 was even higher, at 3,518 cases, a 13% increase over the average size of the docket during 2004 (3,126 cases). Since 2002, when the year-end docket stood at 2,149, the total docket size as of December 31, 2005 has increased by over 60%.

Even as it was closing an increased number of cases, for the sixth consecutive year the CCRB made findings on the merits in its fully investigated cases more than 60% of the time. The rate of findings on the merits in fully investigated cases during 2005 remained consistent with the five-year average from 2001 through 2005: 65%. (See Table 19, Appendix B.) The rate at which the board can reach conclusive factual and legal determinations regarding the allegations raised by a complaint is one measure of the quality of the CCRB's investigations, because the investigation must uncover sufficient evidence before the board can make such a finding.

Reasons for Productivity Increase

There were three principal factors behind the agency's productivity increase in 2005: 1) a sustained high average investigator headcount; 2) a substantial increase in the number of cases assigned to each board panel; and 3) continued emphasis on efficiency during the investigative process. From 2000 to 2005, the agency increased the percentage of its employees working in the Investigations Division from 69% to 80%. In addition, during 2004 and 2005 the Office of Management and Budget quickly approved requests to hire new investigators, resulting in consistently higher investigator staffing levels than in previous years. As a result, in 2005 the agency had an average investigator headcount of 143, an 8% increase from the 133 in 2004 and the highest in the agency's history.

The high investigator headcount resulted in lower individual caseloads, which allowed investigators to be more productive. The average investigator caseload dropped from 26 in 2004 to 19 in 2005. By keeping caseloads low, the agency was able to obtain maximum productivity from each investigator, since low caseloads proved to be more important than overtime spending in increasing productivity. In 2005, the agency spent approximately $238,000 on overtime for investigators (less than half of the $534,103 it spent in 2004), yet the average number of cases submitted to the board per investigator increased from 44 to 47. (See Figure 5, page 24.)

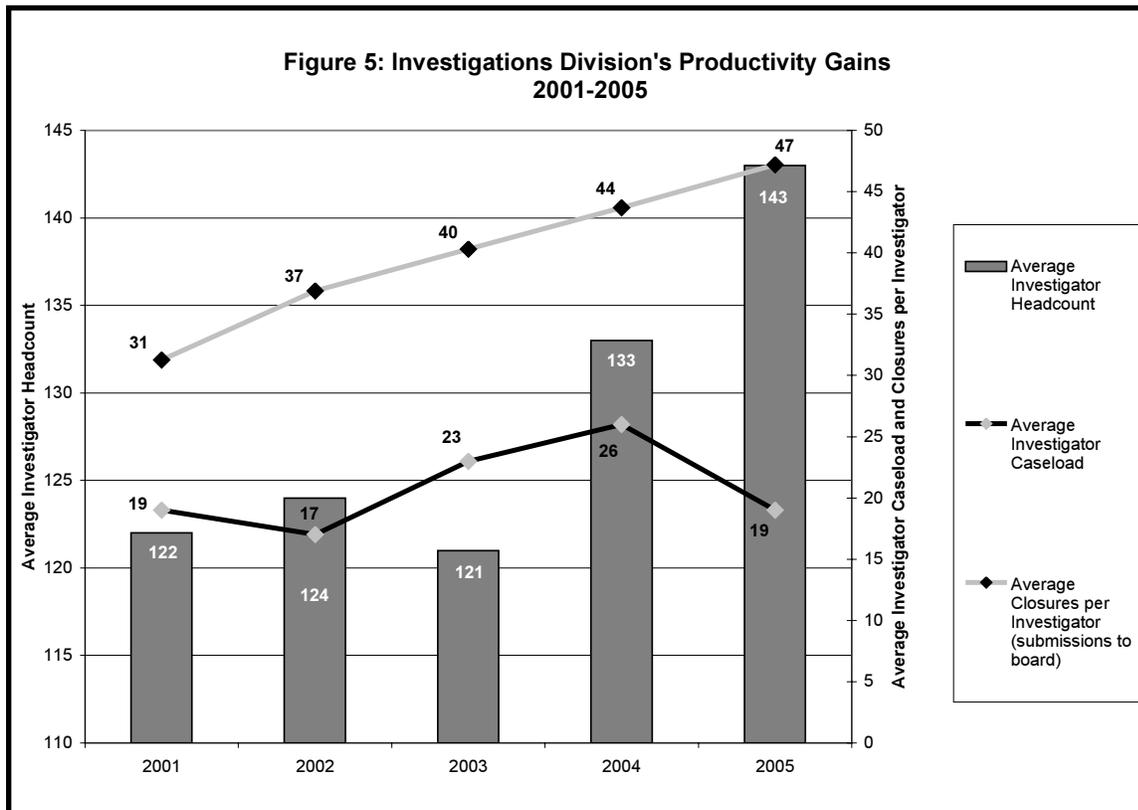

The number of open cases within the Investigations Division (that is, excluding cases that are pending board review or on the Mediation Unit's docket) declined from 2,383 on December 31, 2004, to 2,180 on December 31, 2005. However, the agency's open docket increased while the Investigations Division's open docket decreased, because the number of cases submitted to the board for closure grew to such a degree that the board could not keep up, even though the board substantially increased its own productivity. During 2005 the board, which by statute is limited to 13 members who are not full-time agency employees, took steps to adapt to the greater number of cases closure submissions—steps that led to a 12% improvement in the number of cases it closed in 2005 as compared to 2004. In 2004 the board reviewed only 125 cases per panel: it increased that number to 150 in March of 2005 and to 175 in September of 2005. The increase in cases each panel reviewed led to a decrease in the size of the open docket. From October 1, 2005, through the end of 2005, the agency's open docket decreased from 4,035 to 3,467.

With respect to efficiently utilizing the investigative resources it has, the CCRB continued to concentrate its efforts on those civilians who demonstrated a willingness to pursue their complaint. While investigators take the required steps to locate and gain the cooperation of complainants and alleged victims before recommending to the board that the case be closed with a truncated disposition, prolonged and focused attempts to interview civilians have been curtailed. For example, investigators no longer routinely make time-consuming field trips simply to interview complainants and alleged victims who have not expressed an interest in following up on their complaints. Although this strategy has contributed to a slightly higher rate at which the board closes cases with a truncated disposition—55% of all case closures in 2003-2005, compared to 50% from 2001 and 2002—it assures that limited resources are brought to bear on cases involving civilians willing to provide sworn statements, a required step in the investigative process.

The agency has also tried to expend its resources on cases in which the facts and legal issues are not clear-cut. If a civilian provides in his or her own statement information that would exonerate an officer, for instance, it may not be necessary to interview other witnesses and officers. However, in cases in which it appears an officer committed misconduct, and in cases where it is unclear what happened, investigators still pursue all investigative leads. By focusing on cases that require the most extensive investigation, the agency has decreased the resources devoted to cases where factual and legal issues are more easily resolved.

Age of Docket and Case Completion Time

The age of open CCRB cases improved slightly from 2004 to 2005. At the end of 2005, two-thirds (68%) of the cases on the agency's docket were fewer than five months old, as measured by the date of report, a three-year high. Moreover, from 2004 to 2005, the percentage of cases on the docket over a year old decreased slightly, from 4.5% to 4.0%, and the total number of these cases decreased from 143 to 140. While the percentage of cases on the docket over a year old has been increasing along with the complaint rate (in 2002, only 49 cases, or 2.3% of the open docket, were over a year old, as measured by the date of report), 2005 is the first year since 2002 that the percentage and number of cases more than one year old did not rise. In addition, from 2004 to 2005 the number of cases nine to 12 months old, measured from the date of report, dropped from 309 (10% of the open docket) to 262 (7.7% of the open docket). (See Table 21, Appendix B.)

Rising complaint rates and a larger docket had a small but noticeable effect on case completion times. The CCRB averaged 294 days, a little more than nine and a half months, to close full investigations, two weeks longer than the 280 days it took in 2004. Including truncated investigations and mediation cases, it took an average of 195 days (nearly six and a half months) to close each of the 6,522 cases completed in 2005, 11 days longer than in 2004. (See Table 18, Appendix B.)

Discipline must be imposed or charges filed against NYPD officers within 18 months of the date of the incident, so the agency is particularly concerned when substantiated cases near this threshold. In 2005, 14% of substantiated cases were closed at least 15 months after the date of the incident, up from 12% in 2004 and 10% in 2002 and 2003. Cases between 12 and 14 months old constituted 26% of all substantiated cases, up from 22% in 2004 and 19% in 2003. While these represent only slight compromises in performance, they portend future challenges for the agency.

Mediation

The CCRB's Mediation Unit underwent major personnel changes in 2005. Raymond Patterson, the CCRB's first director of mediation, left the agency on May 13, 2005, to become the associate director of the Saltman Center for Conflict Resolution at the University of Nevada (Las Vegas) Law School, and on July 28, 2005, the senior mediation coordinator resigned. After an extensive search, Victor Voloshin became the CCRB's new mediation director on May 23, 2005. Mr. Voloshin previously mediated cases for the CCRB, community dispute resolution centers, small claims court, and various federal agencies; he is also an adjunct professor at New York University, where he teaches continuing education classes on mediation.

Because of this personnel turnover, the Mediation Unit did not expand the number of cases closed through the mediation process last year. The CCRB mediated 90 complaints and closed 98 cases as "mediation attempted" (a designation used when an officer agrees to mediate but for whatever reason, the complainant drops out of the process) in 2005, 22 fewer cases than the 210 cases it closed in 2004. By comparison, in 2004, the CCRB mediated 113 cases and closed 97 as mediation attempted. (See Table 24A, Appendix C.)

Now that the Mediation Unit is fully staffed with Mr. Voloshin and three mediation coordinators, it is poised to improve its productivity in 2006. The unit accepted 200 cases for processing from July through December 2005, 45 cases more than it accepted in the first half of 2005. Of course, even as productivity increases, the number of cases closed through mediation will be relatively small compared to other dispositions because both the complainant and the subject officer(s) must voluntarily agree to mediation. In addition, both the CCRB and the NYPD rigorously screen the complaint and the subject officer(s) before the agency can schedule a mediation session.

Cases Received in 2005

Of the 6,796 complaints received by the CCRB in 2005, 2,965 (43%) were eligible for mediation. Cases eligible for mediation include those where the officer is accused of using physical (bodily) force; discourteous or offensive language; issuing threats; questioning, stopping and/or frisking a civilian; and refusing to identify him or herself. Complaints are ineligible if the civilian claims the officer caused a physical injury or damaged property. Complaints stemming directly from arrests are also ineligible for mediation. Of these 2,965 eligible complaints, the agency considered 2,637 (89%) suitable for mediation. The agency decides whether cases are suitable for mediation

CCRB INVESTIGATION:

Mediation Resolved Ongoing Dispute Regarding Alternate Side of the Street Parking

A woman and her husband both worked at a hospital located at 180 Fort Washington Avenue in Manhattan. Since it is difficult to find parking near the hospital, many people park illegally and wait inside their vehicles until alternate side of the street parking rules allow cars to park, beginning at 8:30 a.m.

At about 8:15 a.m. on August 25, 2005, the woman and her husband were waiting inside their illegally parked car. An officer whom the couple recognized drove up behind them and asked them to move their vehicle. In response, the husband left the car and asked, "Yo, why do I have to move?"

The officer answered, "Because I said so." He asked for the man's registration, then changed his mind and allegedly said, "I don't want your fucking registration. I'm going to give you a ticket anyway." Before leaving, the officer supposedly said, "Whenever I see this fucking car, I'm going to give it a ticket." Then he gave the man a second summons.

The couple went to the 33rd Precinct and obtained the officer's shield number from the desk sergeant. They already knew his name from their daily parking routine. The wife filed a complaint with the CCRB on August 29, 2005.

The couple continued to park in front of the hospital and the officer continued to write them summonses. According to the wife and husband, the officer never placed these on the couple's car. They only found out about them when they received letters from the city.

On September 13, 2005, a CCRB investigator presented the woman with the option of mediating her complaint. She stated that did not necessarily want the officer to be disciplined, but wanted him to "understand that he cannot treat people this way." She agreed to mediate the complaint, as did the officer two weeks after the option was offered to him.

The mediation took place at the CCRB on December 16, 2005. Two mediators facilitated the discussion between the officer and the woman and her husband. The discussion, though, quickly stalled: the husband repeated that the officer didn't have the right to issue the summonses, and the officer insisted that he did have the right to issue them. The mediators told the parties, as the investigator had previously explained to the wife, that the agency could not affect how summonses are resolved in court. At this point, the mediators decided to speak individually with each side.

In private, the officer explained to the mediators that he had felt disrespected by the man's way of speaking to him. "I don't respond to 'Yo,'" he said. "I would respond to 'Officer,' but I don't respond to 'Yo.'" When the mediators spoke with the civilians, on the other hand, the civilians explained that they felt the officer was vindictive when he issued them multiple summonses. They were upset that the officer did not place summonses on their car and that they learned of them only later.

Armed with the information they had obtained speaking privately with the parties, when the parties met again in the same room the mediators told them that while mediation acknowledges what has happened in the past, the parties should focus on the future. Since the civilians and the officer would continue to see each other every day in front of the hospital, they had two options: 1) repeat the cycle of summonses and complaints or 2) focus on a solution.

The civilians and the officer acknowledged the mediators' framework for working out their issues and ultimately the husband apologized to the officer for the use of "Yo" instead of a more respectful address. The officer, in turn, promised to extend the same courtesy to the husband and wife as he did to other motorists in front of the hospital. He promised to allow them to sit inside their illegally parked car until 8:30 a.m. The officer also added that although the complainant believed the summonses to be vindictive, the officer had seen her husband drive through a red light a week earlier and he had used his discretion to not issue a summons. In response, the wife joked, "If he runs a red light, you should give him a ticket."

Both parties signed a resolution agreement and the CCRB closed the case as mediated.

based on the number of subject officers, the civilian's intent to file a lawsuit, the subject officer's and complainant's CCRB complaint history, and other factors. As of December 31, 2005, CCRB investigators had offered the complainant the option to mediate in 1,047 of these 2,637 suitable complaints (40%), and in 441 of the 955 cases (46%) where the agency received an answer from the complainant, the civilian accepted mediation. Of the 1,590 cases suitable for mediation in which it was not offered, the board has already closed 1,002, largely because the complainant could not be located or did not wish to pursue the complaint.

Cases Processed by the Mediation Unit in 2005

The Mediation Unit processed 374 cases during 2005. The Investigations Division refers cases to the Mediation Unit after it reviews the case and decides it is appropriate to offer the complainant the opportunity to mediate. Only after the complainant agrees to mediate is the case sent to the Mediation Unit. Of these 374 cases, the unit rejected eight and returned 16 to investigators for further work, and the complainant sought a full investigation after the case was transferred to the Mediation Unit in 19 cases. The NYPD's Department Advocate's Office deemed the subject officer an inappropriate candidate in 40 cases and the board's Alternative Dispute Resolution Committee rejected one case as unsuitable. In addition, one or more subject officers declined to mediate in 80 cases. (During 2005, officers agreed to mediate 73% of the time, an increase from the 69% who agreed to mediate in 2004.) The Mediation Unit closed ten cases in which the complainant withdrew his or her complaint before the officer could agree to mediate; it closed seven others with a miscellaneous disposition because the subject officer left the police department. Of the ninety-five cases in which a mediation was scheduled and both parties arrived for the mediation, ninety (95%) were mediated successfully; the other five were returned to investigators for a full investigation. While the process of bringing a case to mediation requires time, effort, and delicacy, the CCRB places special importance on this cooperative method of resolving complaints, and will continue to encourage civilians and officers to choose mediation to resolve their disputes.

Upcoming Challenges

Although the agency has thus far prevented its performance from significantly deteriorating in the face of a dramatic increase in complaints, it has not been able entirely to keep pace with the number of complaints currently being filed. The CCRB closed 704 more complaints in 2005 than in 2004, and 935 more complaints in 2004 than in 2003 (see Table 24A, Appendix B), but the sustained increase in filings has resulted, since 2002, in a rise of the agency's docket of more than 1,300 cases. (See Table 21, Appendix B.) By reviewing more cases per panel, the board should be able to keep up with the higher number of cases submitted to it for closure by both Investigations Division and the Mediation Unit, and, therefore, keep pace with the number of complaints currently being filed.

However, the board will not have the opportunity to reduce its open docket if the agency's investigative staff is reduced, which would be required by the five-year budget plan in effect at the end of December 31, 2005. That budget calls for a reduction in overall agency staffing by 24 positions; such a reduction would permit the CCRB to employ just 122 investigators. Based upon 2005 complaint rates, the agency has calculated that it needs 150 investigators to handle the number of cases it will receive in the future. Even more alarming, over the course of 2005 complaints generally increased from month to month, indicating that the number of complaints filed in 2006 will exceed the number filed in 2005. Should the agency be forced to operate with a greatly diminished staff as the public continues to file complaints in record numbers, recent productivity gains (produced by low caseloads generated by a high average investigator headcount) would be eliminated and the CCRB's ability to conduct thorough and timely would be jeopardized.

COMPLAINT DISPOSITIONS

Dispositions of Cases

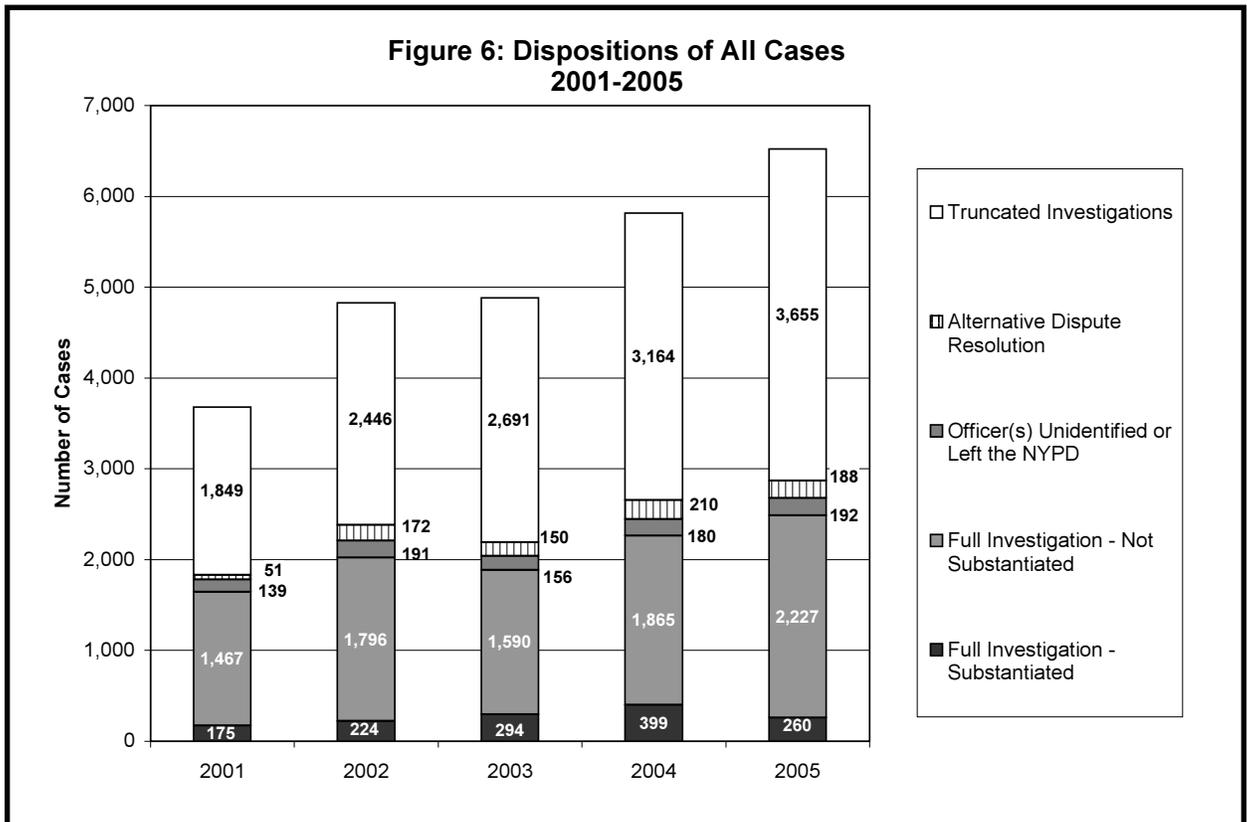

A case is considered substantiated if the board substantiated one or more allegations raised by the complaint following a full investigation. Cases in which no allegation is substantiated are not always classified by a single disposition, since the individual allegations can each have different dispositions. In addition, since some cases have multiple substantiated allegations but are counted as a single substantiated case, the total number of substantiated cases will be smaller than the total number of substantiated allegations.

In 2005, the board closed 2,679 full investigations. Of these cases, the board substantiated 260, or 10%. This is a significant drop from the 16% substantiation rate last year, or the 14% rate in 2003. The CCRB has been unable to identify a cause for the drop: the membership of the board has not significantly changed in the last year. The 10% rate, however, is only slightly lower than the 2001 through 2005 average of 12%. This means that the decrease could be simply the result of

Of the 2,419 full investigations resolved where the board did not substantiate any allegations, the board closed 146 without identifying any of the subject officers and 46 as “miscellaneous,” because all of the subject officers were no longer members of the police department. The remaining 2,227 cases, in which the board closed the allegations primarily as exonerated, unfounded, and/or unsubstantiated, represent 83% of all full investigations, up from 76% in 2004 and a bit above the five-year average of 80%. (See Table 24A, Appendix C.)

The rate at which the board closed cases as truncated—because the complainant or alleged victim withdrew his/her complaint, did not cooperate, or could not be located—remained steady in 2005 at a rate that increased three years ago. While the board closed approximately 50% of all cases in each year from 2000 through 2002 with a truncated disposition, in 2003 it closed 55%, in 2004 it closed 54%, and in 2005 it closed 56%. Fifty-five percent of these cases in 2005 were truncated because the complainant or alleged victim was uncooperative—that is, the investigator possessed reliable contact information for the civilian, but the civilian did not respond to efforts to arrange for an interview, or simply refused to be interviewed. As part of the agency’s ongoing efforts to efficiently deploy its resources, investigators are making fewer attempts to go above and beyond the required contact attempts in trying to secure cooperation from civilians who, for a variety of reasons, do not wish to participate in the investigative process. (See Table 24A, Appendix C.)

Figure 6 (page 29) shows the disposition of all cases from 2001 through 2005, which allows for comparison of case closures. Because the board cannot speculate on the merits of a case that is not fully investigated, it uses “cases closed after a full investigation” as the most accurate set from which to measure rates at which cases are substantiated or not substantiated. When measured as a percentage of all closed cases, however, substantiated cases make up a smaller percentage than they do of all full investigations. Thus, while the 260 substantiated cases constitute 10% of cases closed after a full investigation, they make up only 4% of all complaints the board closed in 2005. (See Table 24A, Appendix C.)

Dispositions of All Allegations

Because the case substantiation rate includes any fully investigated complaint with at least one substantiated allegation, it will necessarily be higher than the allegation substantiation rate. In 2005, the CCRB substantiated 709 allegations of misconduct against 371 officers, representing 7% of all allegations closed following a full investigation. This is lower than the five-year average allegation substantiation rate of 8% and much lower than the 2004 allegation substantiation rate of 11% (1,003 substantiated allegations, against 554 officers), but on par with allegation substantiation rates in 2001 and 2002, which were both 7%. (See Tables 24B and 30, Appendix C.)

Corresponding to the decrease during 2005 in the agency’s substantiation rate, the rate at which it unfounded allegations increased from 17% in 2004 to 21% in 2005. Again, it appears that 2004 was the statistical outlier, as the rate at which the board unfounded allegations after a full investigation stood at an average of 20% over the last five years. (See Table 24B, Appendix C.)

Aside from the substantiation and unfounded rates, other allegation disposition rates remained essentially unchanged: following a full investigation the CCRB exonerated 37% of all allegations and unsubstantiated 24% in 2005. These figures are similar to the rates in 2004, when the exoneration rate was 35% and the unsubstantiated rate 25%. The five-year averages for these allegations were 36% and 25%, respectively. (See Table 24B, Appendix C.)

In 2005, the CCRB closed 912 allegations after a full investigation without identifying the subject officer, for a rate of 9%, the highest rate in five years. The agency has made a concerted effort to spend extra effort to identify officers, bringing the rate down from 13% and 12% in the late 1990s, to 9% in 2000, and to just 6% in 2002. The increase over the last two years shows some erosion of these improvements. (See Table 24B, Appendix C and the CCRB January-December 2001 Status Report, Table 49, Appendix D.)

Dispositions of Specific Allegations

Since 2003 the CCRB has reported on the disposition rates for each type of allegation. Tables 25 through 29 in Appendix C contain this information for the 2001-2005 reporting period. Detailing dispositions for each specific allegation gives a five-year picture of which allegations are substantiated, exonerated, unfounded, or unsubstantiated more or less frequently than average disposition rates. The rates for specific allegations should be compared to the disposition rates for all allegations in table 24B.

Force Allegations

The CCRB receives more allegations of unjustified physical (bodily) force than any other specific allegation. (Tables 2-5, Appendix A.) While the allegation is frequently lodged, it is not frequently substantiated—the substantiation rate for the allegation from 2001 through 2005 is 4%, compared to the 8% average for all allegations. (See Tables 24B and 25, Appendix C.) During the last five years, the board exonerated this allegation 50% of the time it considered it, substantially higher than the 36% for all allegations. This pattern, in fact, holds true throughout the force category, where the board exonerated all force allegations at a rate of 47% and substantiated them at a rate of 4% throughout the five-year reporting period. (See Tables 24B and 25, Appendix C.)

CCRB INVESTIGATION:

Officers Ruptured Spleen of Man Whom They Punched and Kicked As the Man Swallowed Drugs

From an observation post to which he was assigned, on May 7, 2003, an officer observed a drug addict with an extensive criminal history buy cocaine. The officer radioed a description of the man to his back-up team. A sergeant and a patrol officer, from the Manhattan's 23rd Precinct Tracer Unit, subsequently approached the man on Third Avenue near East 115th Street; the man tossed the two "dime bags" of cocaine into his mouth. According to the man, in order to stop him from swallowing the drugs, the patrol officer grabbed his throat, choking him. The patrol officer and his sergeant, who were wearing plain clothes, tackled the man, handcuffed him, and repeatedly punched and kicked him in the torso. The man succeeded in swallowing the drugs and opened his mouth to show the officers that they were gone.

The officers arrested the man and took him to the 23rd Precinct, where he immediately complained of an injury. He was taken to a hospital and diagnosed with muscle strain. Once he was transported back to the precinct, the patrol officer issued him a summons for disorderly conduct, and released him.

Two days later, the man returned to the same hospital complaining of pain to his left rib cage area. X-rays indicated a possibility of a non-displaced fracture of one of his ribs. He left the hospital with a diagnosis of chest wall pain and some ibuprofen. Five days later the man called 911 due to ongoing stomach pain and was taken to a different hospital. The second hospital determined that the man's spleen was severely shattered. A surgeon performed an operation to remove the man's spleen. The hospital records also revealed that the man had a non-displaced fracture of two ribs and a likely fracture of a third.

The patrol officer and the sergeant told the CCRB investigator that they had never choked, hit or kicked the man, and that his injury must have been a result of his falling on the ground. However, the CCRB obtained an expert medical opinion from the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner for the City of New York. An associate medical examiner, an expert in forensic pathology, examined the CCRB's investigative file and the man's medical records. The doctor explained that the man's injury was likely caused by the May 7, 2003 incident because there is a normal delay period before a spleen rupture becomes clinically manifest. She also stated that the injury was not consistent with a fall onto a flat surface such as a sidewalk, but could only have been caused by a focal blow to the man's spleen by some type of hard protruding object.

Although the patrol officer had resigned by the time the CCRB closed its investigation on July 14, 2004, (thereby divesting the board of jurisdiction over him), the board concluded that the sergeant used excessive force against the man. Adhering to the board's disciplinary recommendation, the department filed charges against the sergeant and on April 11, 2005, an assistant deputy commissioner of trials conducted a hearing at which the man, the associate medical examiner, and the sergeant testified. The judge also admitted into evidence the CCRB interview of the patrol officer. At the time of the hearing, the man's civil lawsuit, seeking $2 million in damages, against the New York City Police Department was still pending.

In August 2005, the sergeant was found guilty of using excessive force and forfeited ten vacation days.

The CCRB substantiates and exonerates force allegations in the shadow of administrative legal decisions issued by the Office of Administrative Trials and Hearings (OATH) and the department's Deputy Commissioner of Trials (DCT), which set a stringent standard when considering whether force by a police officer constitutes misconduct. These decisions have often repeated the unwillingness of administrative judges to closely second guess the split-second decisions of officers using force in self-defense or to effectuate an arrest, generally finding an officer guilty of misconduct only when the force used is gratuitous.

Abuse of Authority Allegations

Over the past five years, abuse of authority allegations have been substantiated at rates higher than all allegations as a whole. Between 2001 and 2005, when the agency substantiated 8% of all allegations in full investigations, it substantiated 11% of abuse of authority allegations. In 2004, for example, the board substantiated 16% of all abuse of authority allegations in comparison to an average of 12% for all allegations. As the rate at which the board substantiated all allegations fell to 7% in 2005, the board substantiated 10% of abuse of authority allegations last year. (See Tables 24B and 26, Appendix C.)

Within the abuse of authority category, certain specific allegations have consistently been substantiated at a higher-than-average rate, including “vehicle stopped,” “vehicle searched,” “question and/or stopped,” “frisk and /or search,” and “strip search.” The rate at which the board substantiated other abuse of authority allegations, including “retaliatory arrest” and “retaliatory summons,” grew significantly in the past few years. “Retaliatory arrest,” for example, was substantiated at the following rates from 2001 to 2005, respectively: 27%, 19%, 23%, 33%, and 32%.

Discourtesy Allegations

In terms of sheer numbers, the CCRB substantiated the allegation that a police officer spoke or acted discourteously more than any other, substantiating it 583 times between 2001 and 2005. The rate at which discourtesy allegations were substantiated, however, was 8%—exactly average for the five-year period. The high number of substantiated allegations can be attributed to the frequency the allegation is investigated. (See Table 27, Appendix C.)

Offensive Language

From 2001 through 2005, offensive language allegations were substantiated 7% of the time the agency investigated the allegation, consistent with the five-year average for all allegations. By contrast, the board unfounded and unsubstantiated offensive language allegations at rates much higher than others (42% and 38%, respectively, compared to 20% and 25% for all allegations), principally because allegations of offensive language cannot under normal circumstances be exonerated. (See Tables 24B and 28, Appendix C.) While administrative law contains provisions for when a police officer is allowed to use obscenity (for example, when demanding compliance with a lawful order in a tense situation), the New York City Police Department Patrol Guide specifically forbids officers from making disrespectful remarks based upon ethnicity, race, religion, gender, or sexual orientation under any circumstance. (Table 28, Appendix C.)

Characteristics of Substantiated Cases

Location of Incidents Leading to Substantiated Complaints

The CCRB tracks the location of incidents that lead to a complaint by the county, patrol borough, and precinct in which the incident took place. The percentage of substantiated complaints that occurred in each borough has remained consistent over time. In 2005, 30% took place in Manhattan, compared to 25% the year before; 23% in the Bronx, compared to 21% the year before; 31% in Brooklyn compared to 32% the year before; 14% in Queens, compared to 16% in 2004; and 2% in Staten Island, compared to 5% the year before. As was the case with the large increase in substantiated cases between 2003 and 2004, the decrease in substantiated cases from 2004 to 2005 was fairly even across geographical locations. (See Tables 44A-44E, Appendix C.)

At the patrol borough level, the most dramatic drop came in Staten Island, where incidents leading to substantiated complaints fell from 18 incidents in 2004 to five in 2005, and in Patrol Borough Queens North, where 12 incidents led to a complaint being substantiated in 2005, less than half of the 26 that occurred therein 2004. (See Table 44D and 44E, Appendix C.)

Command Assignment of Officers Against Whom the CCRB Substantiated Complaints

Just as in 2004, when nearly every police command featured a rise in the number of officers within it against whom the CCRB substantiated allegations, in 2005 there was an across-the-board decrease. Within the Patrol Services Bureau, every single patrol borough experienced a decrease in substantiated complaints against its officers. The greatest decrease, again, occurred in Patrol Borough Staten Island, where the number of officers against whom complaints were substantiated dropped from 20 in 2004 to six in 2005. Outside of the Patrol Services Bureau some of the decreases were even more dramatic: the number of officers against whom the CCRB substantiated allegations went from 25 to 15 in the Transit Bureau, from 34 to 19 in the Housing Bureau, from 90 to 43 in the Organized Crime Control Bureau, and from 44 to 29 in the

Detective Bureau. (See Table 45, Appendix C.)

Characteristics of Victims

The percentage of black victims in substantiated CCRB complaints has always been higher than the percentage of black civilians in New York City's population. In 2005 the discrepancy shrank slightly from 2004, but remains greater than it was from 2001 through 2003. Of the 453 victims in cases the board substantiated in 2005 whose race was known, 244, or 57%, were black, substantially out of proportion to the 25% of New York City's population who are black. The 2005 rate is below the 63% peak in 2004, but still higher than the 53% of victims in substantiated complaints in 2003 who were black, the 50% they made up in 2002, and the 43% in 2001. (See Table 35, Appendix C.)

The percentage of victims who were Latino was 20% in 2005, a five-year low, and below the 27% of New York City's population who are Latino. Victims who identified themselves as Asian increased from eight to 12 people. Though this constitutes an increase from 1.3% in 2004 to 2.8% in 2005, the traditionally low absolute number makes statistical comparison misleading. Victims who identify themselves as "other" also increased, from 15 people (2%) to 34 (8%), above the 4% of New Yorkers who self-identify as "other." White victims held relatively steady in percentage terms, remaining at 12% even as the total number of white victims dropped from 72 in 2004 to 51 in 2005; in percentage terms their representation remained much lower than the 35% of New York City's population who are white. (See Table 35, Appendix C.)

Males continue to make up a disproportionate and consistent percentage of the victims of substantiated CCRB complaints. In 2005, 74% of the victims of substantiated complaints were male, only slightly higher than the 72% who were male in 2004, and within a few percentage points of every year in the reporting period. Each year this ratio dramatically outpaces the 47% of males residing in New York City. (See Table 37, Appendix C.)

Victims in substantiated cases also continue to be significantly younger than the city's population as a whole. Thirty-one percent of the victims in substantiated CCRB complaints were between 15 and 24 years old (down slightly from 34% in

Investigators discuss cases in order to share their insights and findings

2004), an age group that makes up only 14% of New York City's population. The percentage of victims who were between 25 and 34 years also fell slightly, from 31% in 2004 to 27% in 2005, while only 17% of New York's population is in this age bracket. (See Table 39, Appendix C.)

Characteristics of Officers

Race, Gender, and Residence

The race of officers who are the subject of substantiated allegations continues to parallel their percentage of the NYPD population in general. Yet the percentage of officers with substantiated complaints who were white increased despite a drop in the percentage that white officers comprise of the NYPD. White officers constituted 62% of the officers against whom the board substantiated allegations in 2005, compared to 58% in 2004. During the same time period, the proportion of white officers in the NYPD fell from 60% to 58%. By way of comparison, white officers comprised 65% of the NYPD in 2001. Table 36, Appendix C, depicts the increasing racial diversity within the NYPD over the last five years as well as the race of officers against whom the CCRB substantiated allegations.

Male officers continued to constitute a higher percentage of officers against whom the CCRB substantiated allegations than the proportion of men in the department. In 2005, men made up 93% of the officers against whom the CCRB substantiated allegations out of a department that is 83% male. (See Table 38, Appendix C.)

CCRB INVESTIGATION:

Without Legal Justification Officer Arrested Man who Accidentally Bumped into him on the Street

On February 7, 2004, a 150-pound, 5' 3" tall man was walking on 37th Avenue towards Roosevelt Avenue in Queens, a busy pedestrian thoroughfare. He stepped to the side to avoid a woman waiting for a bus, and as a result bumped another man, who had just left a pizza parlor and was walking across the sidewalk to the curb. The first man immediately said, "Excuse me." Noticing the other man, who was 6'2" and weighed approximately 250 pounds, was a uniformed police officer, the first man said again, "Excuse me." The officer responded, "Watch where the fuck you're going." Upset at the officer's lack of courtesy, the man told the officer that the officer should treat him with respect. The officer called the man a "jackass," handcuffed him, and placed him in the backseat of his parked patrol car, in which his partner was sitting. The man claimed that he remained calm and did not resist arrest, even though he did not know why he had been arrested. At the precinct, the officer issued the man a summons charging him with disorderly conduct, and the officer told him, "You're lucky I didn't beat the shit out of you." A court dismissed the disorderly conduct summons on April 15.

CCRB investigators canvassed the area and located an employee of the pizza parlor in front of which the incident took place. The employee stated that he did not hear what the officer and the civilian said to each other, but observed both of their demeanors. He told the investigators that the civilian was calm and that the officer, who was "grossly upset," yelled at the civilian before arresting him. The officer's partner, told the assigned investigator that while he did not hear what either the civilian or the officer said, both men were calm, the civilian was "quiet," and the encounter resembled that of an ordinary conversation.

When the subject officer was interviewed, however, he described the incident quite differently. He stated that the civilian, after bumping him, said, "Excuse me," as the officer described, "in an obnoxious manner." In return, the officer also said, "Excuse me." According to the officer, the civilian proceeded to say either "Get the fuck out or my way" or "What is the matter with you?" As the officer tried to calm the civilian down, the civilian continued to curse and a crowd began to gather. The officer justified arresting the man for disorderly conduct because the man was "angry, saying profanities." The officer handcuffed the man without assistance and took him to the precinct to check whether the man had any outstanding warrants, after which the officer released him.

Crediting the account of the civilian, whose testimony was corroborated by the pizza parlor employee and the subject officer's partner, on December 14, 2004, the board panel found that the officer spoke rudely to the civilian, unlawfully arrested him, and issued him a summons without probable cause and in bad faith. The police department filed and served disciplinary charges against the officer; an assistant deputy commissioner for trials conducted a hearing on June 29, 2005. The administrative law judge agreed with the CCRB that the officer had committed misconduct and recommended that the officer forfeit ten vacation days, a recommendation that the police commissioner approved in August 2005.

The CCRB has always kept track of where officers against whom it substantiates complaints live, with special attention to the sensitive issue of whether or not officers live within New York City. It has never found that residency in or outside of New York City among officers against whom the agency substantiates complaints is disproportionate to where all officers live. (See Table 41, Appendix C.)

Tenure, Education, and Rank

In its January-December 2003 Status Report, the CCRB noted that officers who were appointed to the department between 1992 and 1994 made up a disproportionate number of the officers in substantiated CCRB complaints, and this trend has continued. These officers continue to be overrepresented in substantiated complaints for every year between 2002 and 2005. In 2005, however, another trend became visible: officers appointed in every class through 1991 made up a smaller percentage of officers against whom the CCRB substantiated complaints during 2005 than they do of the NYPD population as a whole, while officers appointed after 1991 are overrepresented in substantiated complaints. (See Table 43, Appendix C.)

NYPD Disposition of Substantiated CCRB Cases

The education of officers against whom the CCRB substantiated allegations has generally diverged only slightly from the educational background of all officers in the department. In 2005, 23% of the officers with a substantiated complaint had a four-year undergraduate degree and exactly 23% of all NYPD officers fell within this educational category. This was the first year during the five-year reporting period that this educational class was not underrepresented in terms of substantiated complaints. Officers with some college but no degree were the only group that was significantly overrepresented, making up 47% of the officers with substantiated complaints in 2005 while making up only 42% of the department. Interestingly, officers with only a high school diploma or GED were underrepresented in 2005, constituting 17% of the officers with substantiated complaints but 20% of the department. In 2004 they accounted for 25% of the substantiated complaints and 21% of the department. (See Table 40, Appendix C.) One possible conclusion for this decrease is that the officers in this educational category tend now to also have longer tenure. Since 1993, the NYPD has required new officers to have at least 60 college credits.

There are also small but consistent differences among the ranks of officers against whom the CCRB substantiated allegations in 2005 and the relative percentage each rank makes up of the entire department. Both historically and in 2005, sergeants were overrepresented—18% of the officers against whom the CCRB substantiated a complaint in 2005 were sergeants, while only 14% of department consists of sergeants. (See Table 42, Appendix C.) In investigations where supervisors and officers are on the scene, CCRB investigators are trained to evaluate whether the supervisor directly ordered the actions subordinate officers took; thus, as supervisors, sergeants can be found responsible for the actions of those they directly supervised.

One significant change in 2005 from the previous four years in the five-year reporting period is that those holding the rank of police officer are not underrepresented this year. In 2005, 65% of the officers against whom the CCRB substantiated a complaint held the rank of police officer, mirroring their proportion of the NYPD. For all ranks other than police officer and sergeant, the absolute numbers are so small that no evaluation of percentages and of relative changes is statistically meaningful. (See Table 42, Appendix C.)

While the CCRB makes a disciplinary recommendation for almost every officer against whom it substantiates an allegation, the police commissioner has complete authority over whether an officer receives discipline and the level of discipline imposed. When the CCRB refers a substantiated case to the police commissioner's office, the cases are handled by the Department Advocate's Office, which has three options should it choose to pursue disciplinary action. It can compel an officer to receive instructions or retraining, forward the case to the subject's commanding officer for imposition of a command discipline (though an officer must consent to a command discipline; if he or she does not the case is returned to the advocate), or file charges and specifications. If charges are filed, the officer can plead guilty or submit to a departmental trial, which could result in a recommendation from an administrative law judge for a specific penalty. Final responsibility for disciplinary action always rests with the police commissioner, who can choose to impose or not to impose discipline regardless of the judge's opinion.

The police department reports regularly to the CCRB on the outcome of substantiated cases forwarded to it. In cases where charges and specifications were filed, the department provides the CCRB with the judge's opinion and information regarding the specific discipline imposed; in cases resulting in a command discipline, the department informs the CCRB of the level of the command discipline (A or B), but not the actual penalty (for example, loss of vacation days).

Investigators consult relevant legal precedent before submitting cases to the board

Rates of Discipline

The department has disciplined a relatively stable percentage of officers in cases the CCRB has substantiated in recent years. With the exception of cases the CCRB forwarded in 2002, in which only 63% of the officers received discipline, the department has disciplined between 71% and 78% of the officers whom the CCRB found committed misconduct in each year from 2001 to 2004. Out of the cases forwarded in 2005, the NYPD has so far disciplined 95% of those it has completed; however, this rate is misleading, since 60% of the cases the CCRB forwarded in 2005 remain open at the police department. (See Table 31A, Appendix C.)

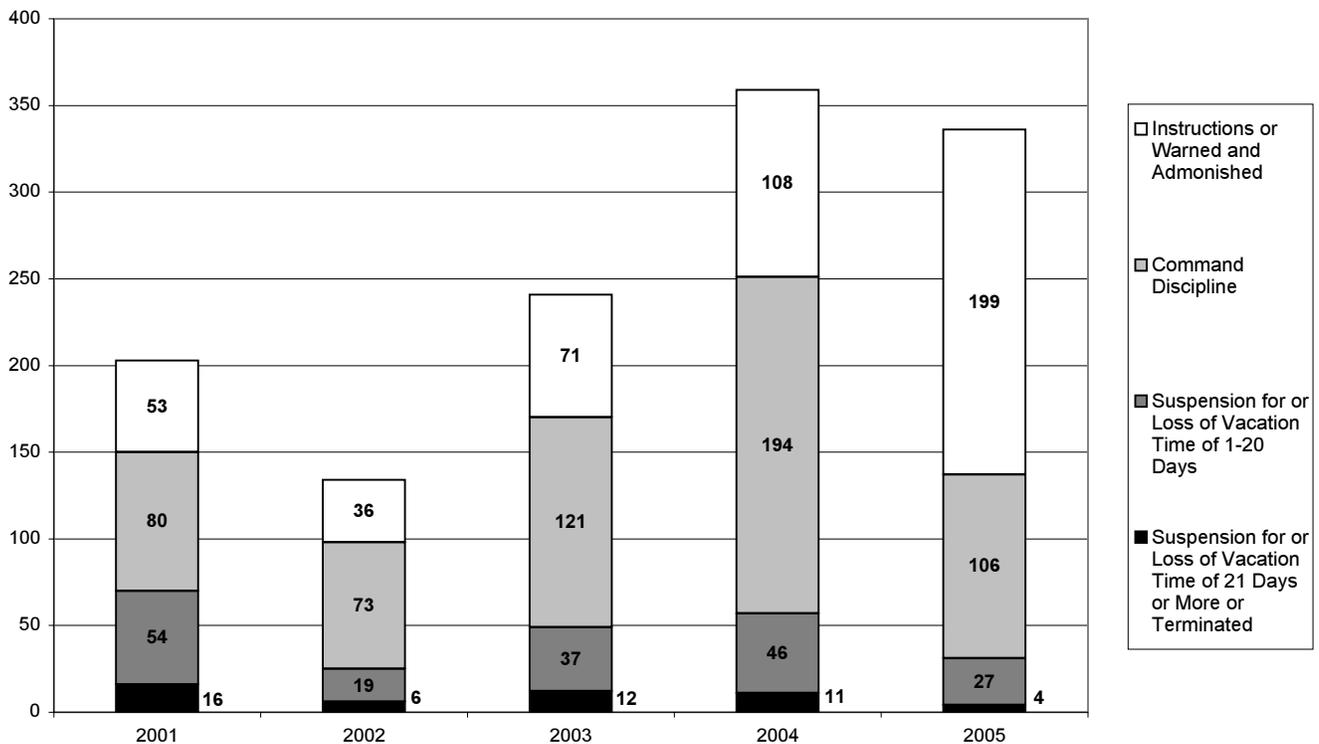

The rates at which the department imposes discipline against officers the CCRB found committed misconduct over the last five years compare favorably to the early years of the agency, when the rate of discipline was as low as 31% (in 1995). The rate grew steadily until it reached 73% in 2000, and has remained relatively constant since then. (See CCRB Status Report January-June 2004 Table 58.)

NYPD Resolution Time and Level of Discipline Imposed

The NYPD has greatly reduced the number of days it takes to close cases forwarded by the CCRB. As recently as 2001, the police department closed substantiated CCRB cases after an average of 558 days. That number steadily decreased, reaching 294 days in 2004 and 240 days last year. (See Table 34, Appendix C.)

One explanation for the improved timeliness of NYPD evaluation and closure of CCRB cases could be the dramatic decrease in the severity of the penalties the NYPD is imposing against officers it chooses to discipline. Out of the 336 disciplinary penalties the NYPD imposed on officers during 2005 against whom the CCRB substantiated misconduct allegations, 196, or 59%, consisted of warning and admonishing the officers or issuing the officers instructions. By contrast, such penalties comprised just 28% of all disciplinary actions from 2001 through 2003, and in 2004 only 30%. Thus, in 2005 the NYPD doubled the rate at which it imposed instructions or issued warnings against officers the CCRB determined committed misconduct. (See Table 32B, Appendix C and Figure 7.)

At the same time, the NYPD has conducted administrative hearings and imposed more serious penalties, such as suspensions, with less frequency. Of the officers whose substantiated cases it resolved,⁴ the percentage of officers against whom the NYPD presented evidence at a hearing fell from a high of 45% in 2001, to 24% and 26% in 2002 and 2003, respectively, to 18% in 2004 and 2005. (See Table 32A, Appendix C.) In addition, only 9% of the disciplinary actions the NYPD took in 2005 consisted of suspension for or a loss of vacation time of at least one day, a five-year low, and the result of a steady decrease from the 34% of such penalties the NYPD imposed in 2001. (See Table 32B, Appendix C, and Figure 7.)

The decline in the severity of penalties the NYPD imposes has not resulted from a comparable decline in the level of discipline the board recommends when it determines that an officer committed misconduct. Instead, the decline in the severity of penalties the NYPD imposes has only increased the already significant disparity between the disciplinary recommendations the CCRB makes and the actual discipline officers receive. Between 2001 and 2005, the board recommended that the department serve charges and specifications against 80% of the officers against whom it substantiated allegations of misconduct, impose a command discipline against 17%, and issue instructions against only 4%, ratios that have been fairly consistent over the five-year period. (See Appendix C, Table 30.)

⁴ Officers who resigned, retired, or were terminated for other reasons, whose substantiated cases the NYPD classified as filed, are excluded from this calculation.

GUIDE TO TABLES

This status report covers the period from January of 2005 through the end of December 2005. Most tables contain comparative data dating from January 2001. Tables 48A-E in Appendix C details the police department action on every case substantiated by the CCRB since 2001.

The CCRB's offices, located in lower Manhattan, were closed for six weeks following the September 11, 2001 attack on the World Trade Center, a fact that should be kept in mind when evaluating the 2001 data in this report. The closure had a serious impact on the agency's operations; during that time individuals could not reach the agency by telephone, though the agency ultimately did receive complaints filed directly with the NYPD and sent by mail to the CCRB. Still, the 4,251 complaints received in 2001 did represent a slight increase over the 4,116 filed in 2000.

The tables in this report do not compare exactly with those published in reports prior to the January-December 2001 status report. CCRB complaint data was originally stored in a database on the police department mainframe computer. The complaint tracking system (CTS), developed specifically for the CCRB and instituted in 2000, has allowed the agency to track information in a more sophisticated manner than in the past; therefore, some tables previously published have been replaced with tables presenting information provided by the CTS.

Information on every complaint that the CCRB receives is entered into the complaint tracking system. The data reflect the information entered by staff members responsible for complaint intake and the Investigations Division on each case. To obtain information relating to complaint activity, the CTS databases were "frozen" on February 2, 2006. The agency waited to freeze the data in order to assure its accuracy; in the course of investigating a complaint, an investigator may discover information that changes how the complaint is listed in this report. For example, a witness may claim in the course of an interview that an officer who was not previously a subject officer cursed at the witness. As a result, a new discourtesy allegation would be added to the initial complaint. Information on cases changes most quickly in the first month the case is open (during that time, for example, the case may be found not to be in the CCRB's jurisdiction). While waiting to freeze the databases ensures that the data are as accurate as possible, slight changes can always occur following the freezing of the data, particularly in ongoing investigations. Consequently, complaint data from 2003 and 2004 in this report differ slightly from previously published complaint statistics.

To obtain statistics regarding agency performance and case dispositions, the agency utilized information from the CTS databases as of January 3, 2006. However, because parties to a complaint can appeal the agency's findings, the board may re-open cases it previously closed. The board may reopen cases either because witnesses who at first were unavailable became available or a party to the complaint presented new evidence to the CCRB. As a result, data involving total number of allegation and case closures for 2003 and 2004 in this report vary insignificantly from previously published disposition statistics.

Data regarding attribution of complaints to commands may also differ from past reports due to reorganization of commands within the New York City Police Department. For example, on January 1, 2005, the police department disbanded the Strategic and Tactical Command (SATCOM), re-created Patrol Borough Brooklyn North, and transferred command of specialized units previously a part of SATCOM to the bureaus and divisions in which such units in other boroughs are housed. The CCRB reorganized its five-year tables to reflect the department's new organization and to allow five-year comparison of data from year to year for all commands in this report. The total number of complaints filed against officers assigned to Patrol Borough Brooklyn North in 2003, for instance, can be compared to the total in 2005 as listed in this report, though past reports would include all SATCOM units and therefore not compare exactly.

In certain tables, information is compared to data from outside sources. For example, some tables compare the racial breakdown of CCRB alleged victims to the racial breakdown of the population of New York City, and the racial breakdown of subject officers to the racial breakdown of the New York City Police Department. Demographic figures on race and gender are from the 2000 United States Census. The Census Bureau released updated figures on the age of New Yorkers in its American Community Survey 2002 Tabular Profile for New York City (the race and gender figures in this update were unchanged from the census). Figures on age come from this later report. In all cases where information is provided regarding the police department, including information on police department dispositions of CCRB complaints, the data come from the department itself.

The age of cases is captured by two different methods. The CCRB measures the age of a case from the date the agency receives it (that is, how long the CCRB actually took to investigate the case). However, the statute of limitations (18 months) that governs the police disciplinary process is calculated from the date of the incident. Since many complaints arise from incidents that significantly predate the filing date (for example, someone who files a complaint only after being released from a jail sentence, or who hears of the CCRB months after the incident), the age of cases measured from the date of incident will always be greater than when measured from the age of report.

* Since complaints with allegations against subject officers assigned to more than one command are assigned to each of the commands with a subject officer, the total number of complaints appears higher than the yearly totals listed in Table 1. If a complaint names multiple subject officers assigned to a single command, the command is credited with one complaint. See the Guide to Tables for more details.

* Cases resolved by the police department in a particular year often stem from CCRB referrals from earlier years.

 Though the officer was terminated as a result of being found guilty of many of the same allegations the board substantiated, the administrative hearing stemmed directly from an internal NYPD investigation.

 The police commissioner did not impose a penalty against an officer who was found guilty after trial stemming from a case the CCRB referred in 2002. Therefore the total number of penalties for cases referred in 2002 (171) is lower than the total number of officers (172) against whom the department took disciplinary action.

* The police commissioner did not impose a penalty against an officer who was found guilty after trial stemming from a case the CCRB referred in 2003. Therefore, the total number of penalties for cases the referred in 2003 (261) is lower than the total number of officers (262) against whom the department took disciplinary action.

*The time it takes the NYPD to resolve substantiated cases is measured from the date that the CCRB physically transferred the case file to the department until the last day of the month in which the department closed the case. The department does not inform the CCRB of its actual disposition date, only the month in which it closed the case. In addition, until January 1, 2005, the NYPD considered a case closed and reported that closure to the CCRB when the Department Advocate's Office referred it to a commanding officer for the imposition of a command discipline. Since January 1, 2005, the NYPD has not reported these cases closed until they have actually been adjudicated at the precinct level. For cases that proceeded to administrative hearings, the time it takes for judges to render written decisions is included in calculating the department's closure time.

New York City Charter and Executive Order 40

NEW YORK CITY CHARTER
CHAPTER 18 - A
CIVILIAN COMPLAINT REVIEW BOARD

§ 440. Public complaints against members of the police department. (a) It is in the interest of the people of the city of New York and the New York City police department that the investigation of complaints concerning misconduct by officers of the department towards members of the public be complete, thorough and impartial. These inquiries must be conducted fairly and independently, and in a manner in which the public and the police department have confidence. An independent civilian complaint review board is hereby established as a body comprised solely of members of the public with the authority to investigate allegations of police misconduct as provided in this section.

(b) Civilian complaint review board

1. The civilian complaint review board shall consist of thirteen members of the public appointed by the mayor, who shall be residents of the city of New York and shall reflect the diversity of the city's population. The members of the board shall be appointed as follows: (i) five members, one from each of the five boroughs, shall be designated by the city council; (ii) three members with experience as law enforcement professional shall be designated by the police commissioner; and (iii) the remaining five members shall be selected by the mayor. The mayor shall select one of the members to be chair.

2. No members of the board shall hold any other public office or employment. No members, except those designated by the police commissioner, shall have experience as law enforcement professionals, or be former employee of the New York City police department. For the purposes of this section, experience as law enforcement professionals shall include experience as a police officer, criminal investigator, special agent, or a managerial or supervisory employee who exercised substantial policy discretion on law enforcement matters, in a federal, state, or local law enforcement agency, other than experience as an attorney in a prosecutorial agency.

3. The members shall be appointed for terms of three years, except that of the members first appointed, four shall be appointed for terms of one year, of whom one shall have been designated by the council and two shall have been designated by the police commissioner, four shall be appointed for terms of two years, of whom two shall have been designated by the council, and five shall be appointed for terms of three years, of whom two shall have been designated by the council and one shall have been designated by the police commissioner.

4. In the event of a vacancy on the board during term of office of a member by a reason of removal, death, resignation, or otherwise, a successor shall be chosen in the same manner as the original appointment. A member appointed to fill a vacancy shall serve for the balance of the unexpired term.

(c) Powers and duties of the board.

1. The board shall have the power to receive, investigate, hear, make findings and recommend action upon complaints by members of the public against members of the police department that allege misconduct involving excessive use of force, abuse of authority, discourtesy, or use of offensive language, including, but not limited to, slurs relating to race, ethnicity, religion, gender, sexual orientation and disability. The findings and recommendations of the board, and the basis therefor, shall be submitted to the police commissioner. No finding or recommendation shall be based solely upon an unsworn complaint or statement, nor shall prior unsubstantiated, unfounded or withdrawn complaints be the basis for any such findings or recommendation.

2. The board shall promulgate rules of procedures in accordance with the city administrative procedure act, including rules that prescribe the manner in which investigations are to be conducted and recommendations made and the manner by which a member of the public is to be informed of the status of his or her complaint. Such rules may provide for the establishment of panels, which shall consist of not less than three members of the board, which shall be empowered to supervise the investigation of complaints, and to hear, make findings and recommend action on such complaints. No such panel shall consist exclusively of members designated by the council, or designated by the police commissioner, or selected by the mayor.

3. The board, by majority vote of its members may compel the attendance of witnesses and require the production of such records and other materials as are necessary for the investigation of complaints submitted pursuant to this section.

4. The board shall establish a mediation program pursuant to which a complainant may voluntarily choose to resolve a complaint by means of informal conciliation.

5. The board is authorized, within appropriations available therefor, to appoint such employees as are necessary to exercise its powers and fulfill its duties. The board shall employ civilian investigators to investigate all complaints.

6. The board shall issue to the mayor and the city council a semi-annual report which describe its activities and summarize its actions.

7. The board shall have the responsibility of informing the public about the board and its duties, and shall develop and administer an on-going program for the education of the public regarding the provisions of its chapter.

(d) Cooperation of police department.

1. It shall be the duty of the police department to provide such assistance as the board may reasonably request, to cooperate fully with investigations by the board, and to provide to the board upon request records and other materials which are necessary for the investigation of complaints submitted pursuant to this section, except such records or materials that cannot be disclosed by law.

2. The police commissioner shall ensure that officers and employees of the police department appear before and respond to inquiries of the board and its civilian investigators in connection with the investigation of complaints submitted pursuant to this section, provided that such inquiries are conducted in accordance with department procedures for interrogation of members.

3. The police commissioner shall report to the board on any action taken in cases in which the board submitted a finding or recommendation to the police commissioner with respect to a complaint.

(e) The provisions of this section shall not be construed to limit or impair the authority of the police commissioner to discipline members of the department. Nor shall the provisions of this section be construed to limit the rights of members of the department with respect to disciplinary action, including but not limited to the right to notice and a hearing, which may be established by any provision of law or otherwise.

(f) The provisions of this section shall not be construed to prevent or hinder the investigation or prosecution of member of the department for violations of law by any court of competent jurisdiction, a grand jury, district attorney, or other authorized officer, agency or body.

HISTORICAL NOTE

Section added LL 1/1993 § 1 eff. July 4, 1993

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, N.Y. 10007

EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 40

October 21, 1997

NOTIFICATION AND PROCESSING OF CIVILIAN COMPLAINTS

WHEREAS, the Civilian Complaint Review Board is charged with the legislative mandate to fairly and independently investigate certain allegations of police misconduct toward members of the public; and

WHEREAS, it is of the utmost importance that members of the public and the New York City Police Department have confidence in the professionalism and impartiality of the Civilian Complaint Review Board; and

WHEREAS, pursuant to the Charter, and the Rules of the CCRB the individuals who have filed complaints with the Civilian Complaint Review Board have the right to be kept apprised of both the status and results of their complaints brought against members of the New York City Police Department; and

WHEREAS, it is important to investigate and resolve civilian complaints in a timely manner; and

WHEREAS, the sharing of information between the Civilian Complaint Review Board and the New York City Police Department is essential to the effective investigation of civilian complaints;

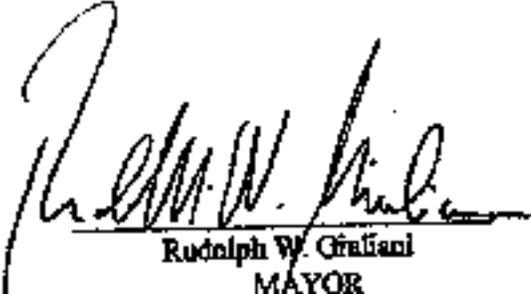

NOW THEREFORE, by the power invested in me as Mayor of the City of New York, it hereby is ordered:

Section 1 - Notice to Civilian Complainants. The Commissioner of the New York City Police Department and the Civilian Complaint Review Board shall expeditiously:

- A. Establish standards for providing timely written notice to civilian complainants regarding the status of civilian complaints during the stages of the Civilian Complaint Review Board's review and investigation process, including final Board action on the pending complaint.
- B. Establish standards for providing timely written notice to civilian complainants regarding the disposition of all cases referred for disciplinary action by the Civilian Complaint Review Board to the Commissioner for the New York City Police Department, including the result of all such referred cases.
- C. The standards established shall require that complainants be given a name, address and telephone number of an individual to contact in order to give or obtain information.

Section 2. The Police Commissioner and the Civilian Complaint Review Board shall establish standards for the timely processing and resolution of civilian complaints and the sharing of necessary information between the agencies.

Section 3. This order shall take effect immediately.

Rudolph W. Giuliani
MAYOR

Appendix E: Glossary

Abuse of authority: Abuse of authority includes the improper use of police powers to threaten, intimidate or otherwise mistreat a civilian. Examples include threats of force and improper stops, frisks, and searches.

Alleged victim: The alleged victim is any individual against whom a police officer is alleged to have committed misconduct. The alleged victim need not be the person who filed the actual complaint with the CCRB. For example, if a mother files a complaint that her son was improperly strip-searched, the son is the alleged victim of the misconduct.

Allegation: Each individual act of misconduct raised by a complainant, witness, or alleged victim against each officer is called an allegation. Thus, if someone files a complaint stating that one police officer punched him while another shouted a racial epithet at his friend, the complaint contains two separate allegations. If two officers are accused of punching one alleged victim and shouting racial epithets at his friend, there will be four allegations raised by the complaint. Since many complaints have multiple alleged victims, and each alleged victim can make (or have made on his or her behalf) multiple allegations against more than one officer, the total number of allegations is always substantially higher than the total number of complaints.

Alternative dispute resolution (ADR): Alternative dispute resolution refers to non-confrontational methods of resolving complaints or conflicts. The CCRB's ADR procedure is mediation (see below).

Charges and specifications: Charges and specifications are the most serious disciplinary measure that may be applied to a police officer with one or more substantiated allegations. It involves the lodging of formal administrative charges against the subject officer who, as a result, may face an administrative hearing. Such hearings are conducted by the department's deputy commissioner for trials and his or her assistants. The recommended penalties range from loss of vacation days or of pay for up to thirty days, sometimes coupled with dismissal probation for a period of up to one year or, at maximum, termination from the police department.

Civilian: At the CCRB, a civilian is any person who is not a police officer.

Command: A command is either a precinct or specialized unit to which an officer is assigned. Officers assigned to a precinct patrol the area within the precinct's boundaries, while officers in a specialized command (for example, the narcotics division) carry out specialized duties over a greater area.

Command discipline: A command discipline is a punishment imposed by an officer's commanding officer, ranging in seriousness from an oral admonishment and training up to a forfeiture of ten vacation days.

Complaint: A complaint consists of one or more allegations of misconduct by one or more uniformed member(s) of the New York Police Department. When someone contacts the CCRB to allege police misconduct, a case file is opened for that complaint. Even if there are allegations that multiple officers engaged in multiple acts of misconduct against multiple civilians, the entire incident is captured as one complaint.

Complainant/victim: If the alleged victim (see above) also files the complaint, the person is referred to by the CCRB as the complainant/victim. Such determination does not exclude other persons from also being alleged victims. For example, in a case where three friends are stopped and frisked and only one files a complaint, all three are alleged victims, but only the person who filed the complaint is a complainant/victim.

Complainant: A person who files a complaint is called a complainant, whether or not the person is the alleged victim of misconduct. For example, where a mother files a complaint on behalf of her son, whom she claims was improperly strip-searched, the mother is the complainant.

CTS: The CCRB's complaint tracking system is an in-house database program that the CCRB uses to track all relevant information regarding complaints filed with the CCRB.

DCT: Deputy commissioner for trials, who is in charge of the police department's administrative tribunal.

Discourtesy: As a CCRB allegation, discourtesy includes rude or obscene gestures and/or language.

Docket: The agency docket includes all cases open at a given time.

Exonerated: The board will vote that an allegation should be exonerated if the subject officer (see below) was found to have engaged in the act alleged, but the act was deemed to be lawful and proper. For example, if someone alleges that a police officer stopped him improperly and the investigation reveals the transcript of a 911 call identifying the alleged victim as a suspect, the allegation that the stop was improper may be exonerated.

FADO: Pronounced "fey-dough," this is an acronym for the four categories of misconduct the CCRB is authorized to investigate: excessive or unnecessary force, abuse of authority, discourtesy, and offensive language.

Filed: If a police officer against whom the CCRB substantiated allegations leaves the police force before charges can be instituted against him or her, the substantiated case is said to be filed. Filed cases can be re-opened by the police department should an officer attempt to rejoin the police department. When the CCRB calculates the number of substantiated cases which have resulted in discipline, cases that have been filed are excluded.

Force: A CCRB complaint of excessive or unnecessary force can range in severity from a slap to firing of a gun. Some allegations that do not involve contact but imply physical force, such as pointing a gun, are classified as force complaints by the CCRB.

Full investigation: A case in which the CCRB was able to carry out a complete inquiry is called a full investigation. Fully investigated cases contain data collected from interviews with police officers, civilians, and witnesses. These cases also contain the final written report of the CCRB investigator, who had to evaluate the available evidence and make recommendations to the board on how the allegations should be resolved.

IAB: Internal Affairs Bureau of the New York City Police Department.

Instructions: Instructions are the least punitive disciplinary measure; a commanding officer instructs a subject officer on proper procedures with respect to the substantiated allegations, or a police officer is sent for retraining or additional training.

Mediation: Mediation is a non-disciplinary process, voluntarily agreed to by the complainant or complainant/victim and subject officer, in which the parties attempt to reconcile their differences with the assistance of a trained neutral mediator, who may assist in resolving the complaint but cannot impose a settlement. The contents of the proceedings are confidential and cannot be used in a future judicial or administrative context.

NYPD disposition: Pursuant to the city charter, the responsibility for discipline within the police department rests solely with the police commissioner who, even after a finding against a police officer by the CCRB and an administrative law judge, can still make de novo findings of law and fact and reach a different conclusion.

OCCB: The NYPD's Organized Crime Control Bureau, which includes narcotics units.

OCD: Office of Chief of Department—a division of the NYPD that handles neglect of duty complaints.

Offensive language: One of the categories in the CCRB's jurisdiction, offensive language refers to any allegation where an officer used language that was derogatory with regard to race, religion, nationality, ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation, disability, or age.

Office of Administrative Trials and Hearings (OATH): Until January 2003, OATH was one of two tribunals which adjudicated police department disciplinary cases. After January 2003, if a CCRB case is substantiated and charges are filed against a police officer, the case will be heard at DCT (see above).

Officer unidentified: If the CCRB cannot identify the subject officer of the allegation, the allegation is closed as officer unidentified. Cases closed with this disposition are considered a fully investigated case although the finding "officer unidentified" does not constitute a finding on the merits.

Other misconduct noted (OMN): If the investigation uncovers misconduct other than that within the CCRB's jurisdiction (for example, an officer intentionally provides a false statement to the CCRB or is found to have failed to properly document his or her activities), the board can determine to recommend that the officer engaged in other misconduct.

Patrol borough: A patrol borough is comprised of a number of precinct commands considered as a unit. In New York City there are eight patrol boroughs: Manhattan North, Manhattan South, Brooklyn North, Brooklyn South, Queens North, Queens South, Bronx, and Staten Island.

Patrol Guide: The New York City Police Department's Patrol Guide incorporates official policies and procedural rules by which police officers must generally conduct themselves. The board reviews the patrol guide to determine whether an officer committed misconduct.

Preponderance of the evidence: Preponderance of the evidence is the standard of proof used in CCRB investigations. It provides that the CCRB must find that the weight of the evidence is in favor of its finding, but is a less stringent standard than the more familiar criminal standard, "beyond a reasonable doubt."

Rate at which the CCRB made findings on the merits: This rate is the percentage of allegations in full investigations that end in a disposition of substantiated, unfounded or exonerated. Since these are the dispositions where the board has come to a decision on the validity of the complaint, the rate is one measure of the quality of CCRB investigations.

Statute of limitations: The agency operates under an eighteen-month statute of limitations measured from the date of occurrence. Unless the allegations would constitute a crime if proven in court, an officer must be disciplined or served with disciplinary charges before the statute of limitations has passed.

Stop, question, and frisk report: A document that police officers are generally required to fill out when they stop, question and/or or frisk civilians.

Subject officer: The officer who is alleged to have engaged in misconduct, whether identified or not, is referred to as a subject officer.

Substantiated: If the weight of the evidence shows that the officer committed the action alleged, and the action alleged constituted misconduct, the CCRB will substantiate the allegation and the case will be forwarded to the police commissioner.

Truncated investigations: A truncated investigation is one where the case is closed before it has been fully investigated. If the CCRB is unable to obtain a primary statement from the complainant or alleged victim(s), or if the complainant or alleged victim wishes to withdraw the complaint, the investigation is truncated.

Unfounded: If the weight of the evidence shows that the police officer did not in fact engage in the alleged misconduct, the board will vote that the allegation be unfounded.

Unsubstantiated: If the weight of the evidence does not lead to a finding on the merits, the board will vote that the allegations be unsubstantiated.

Witness: A witness is any civilian interviewed in connection with a CCRB case who was neither a complainant or a victim. Generally, a witness actually observed the incident which gave rise to the allegations, but occasionally someone is interviewed who did not (for example, an emergency medical technician arriving on the scene who can verify whether or not an alleged victim had injuries before he or she was taken to a precinct).

Witness officer: A witness officer is any officer interviewed over the course of an investigation against whom no misconduct is alleged.
