

My name is Robert A. Hunter and a father of four. I am also a school educator and a native son of Bedford Stuyvesant.

Brooklyn has always been an adverse and affluent community without constant change, being the matriarch in uniting more nations than any other country.

My appreciation for my community has grown due to the ever-changing effects without positive longevity to families.

Being a native son, I understand the struggles of social infrastructure, being a success myself growing up with a single parent.

I have served my country with the United States Army and would like to bring this experience to all of the people in Brooklyn. Due to my experience, I was given a glance of the manner in which other people lived and what they expect, as a strong family.

My endeavors are solely in providing conduits to American families in communities to enhance their current living conditions.

Namely, healthcare: having accessibility to all families who are dependent upon our State.

Education: implement inexpensive methods in acquiring education to all nationalities, for better understanding and growth for a positive nation without division.

Economic finance: providing conduits to the younger generation in understanding the value of money.

Affordable housing to the mentally challenged and the elderly, likewise the working class. And social services in each neighborhood.

My experience is both corporate and community serving as an advocate, volunteer to the elderly and the youth alike.

And, this I believe is the key to a beacon of hope with positive change.
