

My name is Bob Zuckerman, and I'm running for City Council because I'm offering bold ideas for Brooklyn and a new vision for how we govern at City Hall.

I'm the only one in this race talking about how to create jobs and stabilize our economy.

Have you noticed all the empty storefronts in our neighborhoods? I know something about small business. I started one myself and then I ran a local chamber of commerce, and I'm running to help the mom and pop shops on Fifth Avenue in Park Slope, not the big corporations on Fifth Avenue in Manhattan.

I have a plan to help small business owners purchase their storefronts so they aren't subject to escalating rents.

I want to create New York's first Green District around the Gowanus Canal bringing in thousands of new green jobs in alternative energies and serving as a model for sustainable development and design.

Speaking of the environment, let's fix the parking mess and the congestion that's choking our streets. We need a residential parking permit plan to allow residents to find parking near their homes.

The money from the permits would be reinvested into new transportation alternatives, including free shuttle buses for our neighborhoods.

You hear a lot of talk about reform these days, but I'm the only candidate with the ideas and the passion for bringing real change to City Hall. That's why I've been endorsed by people like Congressman Anthony Weiner.

As a Council Member, I will come to you through a mobile field office that will visit a different neighborhood one night a week.

In addition, I was the first candidate in this race to denounce the extension of term limits and insist that the City Council be a full-time position.

Accessibility. Transparency.
Accountability. It's why I became a Democrat.

Now, I hear a lot of bickering in this race about who Howard Dean endorsed first and who sends his kids to private school. But there are serious issues at stake in this election.

If you want someone with bold ideas, who will deliver real reform to the people of the 39th District, then vote for me on Election Day.

I'm Bob Zuckerman, and I'd be honored to have your support.
