1. Overdevelopment with Large Buildings Without Community Input: The Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracking of housing projects could allow 45-foot-tall buildings next to single-family homes in low-density areas like Tottenville, with minimal community input. These towering structures would destroy our suburban character, block sunlight, and devalue properties by an estimated 5-10% (based on overdevelopment studies), prompting lawsuits under state property law for damages or Fourteenth Amendment due process violations due to unfair zoning processes. The current ULURP system ensures community oversight, preventing such drastic changes without resident consent.
2. Loss of Local Control Through the Land Use Appeals Board: The proposed Land Use Appeals Board, would replace the Mayor's veto power over City Council land use decisions, rendering the Mayor—the highest-ranking city official elected by all New Yorkers—powerless. This shift centralizes authority in a board that could override local opposition, silencing residents and local council members. This violates Fourteenth Amendment due process rights by denying homeowners a meaningful opportunity to be heard, risking federal civil rights lawsuits. The current ULURP system, with its balance of local and mayoral input, ensures fairness and must be preserved.
3. Financial Burdens and Property Tax Hikes: Larger landowners could face tax hikes of 10-20% due to reassessments from nearby developments, alongside pressure to sell for housing projects. This could lead to lawsuits claiming unfair taxation or violations of equal protection under federal law. The current ULURP system allows community input to mitigate such financial harms, protecting homeowners.
4. Flood Zone Property Takeovers Without Sufficient Say: In flood-prone areas like Tottenville, resiliency projects like voluntary flood buyouts could allow the city to acquire properties under the pretext of safety, with minimal homeowner input. The designation of small or undevelopable lots for government acquisition is arbitrary and violates protections against property takings under the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause, risking federal lawsuits for inadequate compensation or coerced consent. The current ULURP system ensures community involvement, safeguarding property rights.
5. Quality of Life Impacts and Lawsuits: Increased housing projects could bring more traffic, noise, and strain on local services like schools and parks, degrading Tottenville's suburban character and exacerbating flooding risks. These changes could devalue properties, fueling lawsuits under state law for damages from altered neighborhood aesthetics and functionality. The current ULURP system allows residents to challenge harmful projects.
6. Fair Housing Act: The Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.) mandates equal access to housing for all people, not just specific groups. Rushed approvals of large housing projects could disproportionately harm existing homeowners by devaluing properties and altering community character, potentially violating the Act's equal access mandate and leading to claims of discriminatory impact. The current ULURP system ensures equitable consideration of all residents' concerns.

Case Scenarios: 45-Foot Buildings Towering Over Homes: A 45-foot apartment building next to your home could block sunlight, reduce views, and devalue your property by 5-10%, prompting lawsuits under state property law or Fourteenth Amendment due process violations for unfair zoning. Silencing the Mayor and

Community: The Land Use Appeals Board, by eliminating the Mayor's veto power, renders the city's highest elected official powerless and could approve large projects against community wishes, violating due process and sparking federal civil rights litigation. Skyrocketing Taxes and Forced Sales: Larger landowners could face tax hikes of 10-20% or pressure to sell for housing projects, leading to lawsuits for equal protection violations or unfair taxation. City Takeovers in Flood Zones: The city could arbitrarily designate small or undevelopable lots in Tottenville for acquisition, violating the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause and triggering federal lawsuits for lack of just compensation or due process. Overcrowding and Infrastructure Collapse: Increased density could overwhelm local services, worsen flooding, and reduce property values, fueling lawsuits for damages from unchecked development. Potential Federal Law and Civil Rights Violations These proposals at a minimum risk violating:

- Fifth Amendment (Takings Clause): Arbitrary acquisition of small/undevelopable lots in flood zones could constitute physical takings, requiring just compensation.
- Fifth Amendment (Due Process Clause): The Land Use Appeals Board's override of local opposition and elimination of the Mayor's veto power denies homeowners and the city's highest elected official due process.
- Fourteenth Amendment (Due Process Clause): Lack of meaningful community input violates procedural due process.
- Fourteenth Amendment (Equal Protection Clause): Disproportionate tax burdens on larger landowners could be deemed discriminatory.
- Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.): Rushed approvals could disproportionately harm existing homeowners, violating equal access mandates for all.

Why the Current System Works The current ULURP process empowers Staten Island residents, especially in Tottenville, through local council member deference and Community Board input. It aligns with the Fifth Amendment and Fair Housing Act, protecting property values and ensuring equal access to housing processes for all. The proposed changes falsely promise influence while centralizing power, risking federal lawsuits over devaluation and civil rights violations. We urge the Commission to reject these changes and preserve the current ULURP system. Sincerely, Eugene Mileto Concerned Staten Islander

Comments: Dear Members of the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission, We, the residents of Staten Island, particularly in low-density communities like Tottenville on the South Shore, strongly oppose the proposed changes in the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission Final Report. These changes threaten our quality of life, property rights, and constitutional protections under the Fifth Amendment, which states, “nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.” The proposed amendments, under the guise of promoting “fair and equitable housing,” falsely promise community empowerment while stripping taxpayers of their say, rendering the Mayor—the highest-ranking city official elected by the people of New York City—powerless, and risking violations of federal laws, including the Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.), which mandates equal access to housing for all people. We demand the preservation of the current Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) to protect our neighborhoods and prevent costly lawsuits. Main reasons for opposition:

1. Overdevelopment with Large Buildings Without Community Input: The Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracking of housing projects could allow 45-foot-tall buildings next to single-family homes in low-density areas like Tottenville, with minimal community input. Comments: Dear Members of the NYC Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing to express my opposition to the potential ballot proposal for open primaries. Our city's recent adoption of the successful and popular ranked choice voting system and public finance campaign program is undermined by this Commission's proposal recommendation for open primaries. Your Commission was not convened to address changes to our city's electoral system, which already encourages strong participation from voters. Special interests can and will spend enormous sums to game open primary elections, weakening the role of matching funds approved by voters to encourage fair elections. Additionally, open primaries would suppress the right for duly registered political party members to use the ranked choice voting system to elect the best candidate for their party. It's clear that it would not benefit the city's electoral system to eliminate the role of primary elections within political parties and diminish the power of grassroots donations in favor of special interests. I strongly encourage the Commission to withdraw the open primaries ballot proposal. Thank you.

Comments: I am against any building of 45 foot apartments being build in Tottenville or any large capacity building being build in out suburbs area .. I am all for fair housing .. so let the people live where they can afford to live ... make house purchases more easy for the people . My taxes for my house should not be raise for building to be built for people who doesn't even work

Comments: Dear Members of the NYC Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing to express my opposition to the potential ballot proposal for open primaries. Our city's recent adoption of the successful and popular ranked choice voting system and public finance campaign program is undermined by this Commission's proposal recommendation for open primaries. Your Commission was not convened to address changes to our city's electoral system, which already encourages strong participation from voters. Special interests can and will spend enormous sums to game open primary elections, weakening the role of matching funds approved by voters to encourage fair elections. Additionally, open primaries would suppress the right for duly registered political party members to use the ranked choice voting system to elect the best candidate for their party. It's clear that it would not benefit the city's electoral system to eliminate the role of primary elections within political parties and diminish the power of grassroots donations in favor of special interests. I strongly encourage the Commission to withdraw the open primaries ballot proposal. Thank you.

Dear Charter Revision Commission,

I am writing to ask that you do not instittue open primaries in NYC. We need to have distinct political parties that develop platforms that represent the interests of those who vote for their party and then primaries for those voters to chose a candidate within their party to represent them. Open primaries undermine organizing and community based leadership. Making this change would make it harder for everyday New Yorkers to be heard and represented.

Thanks for your consideration of this important issue,

Kathleen Mccullagh

Comments: Opposition Letter to the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission Re: Urgent
Opposition to 2025 NYC Charter Changes – Protect Staten Island Homeowners’ Constitutional Rights and Community Input Dear Members of the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission, We,
the residents of Staten Island, particularly in low-density communities like Tottenville on the South Shore, strongly oppose the proposed changes in the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission Final Report. These changes threaten our quality of life, property rights, and constitutional protections under the Fifth Amendment, which states, “nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.” The proposed amendments, under the guise of promoting “fair and equitable housing,” falsely promise community empowerment while stripping taxpayers of their say, rendering the Mayor—the highest-ranking city official elected by the people of New York
City—powerless, and risking violations of federal laws, including the Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.), which mandates equal access to housing for all people. We demand the preservation of the current Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) to protect our neighborhoods and prevent costly lawsuits. Main reasons for opposition:

1. Overdevelopment with Large Buildings Without Community Input: The Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracking of housing projects could allow 45-foot-tall buildings next to single-family homes in low-density areas like Tottenville, with minimal community input. These towering structures would destroy our suburban character, block sunlight, and devalue properties by an estimated 5-10% (based on overdevelopment studies), prompting lawsuits under state property law for damages or Fourteenth Amendment due process violations due to unfair zoning processes. The current ULURP system ensures community oversight, preventing such drastic changes without resident consent.
2. Loss of Local Control Through the Land Use Appeals Board: The proposed Land Use Appeals Board, would replace the Mayor's veto power over City Council land use decisions, rendering the Mayor—the highest-ranking city official elected by all New Yorkers—powerless. This shift centralizes authority in a board that could override local opposition, silencing residents and local council members. This violates Fourteenth Amendment due process rights by denying homeowners a meaningful opportunity to be heard, risking federal civil rights lawsuits. The current ULURP system, with its balance of local and mayoral input, ensures fairness and must be preserved.
3. Financial Burdens and Property Tax Hikes: Larger landowners could face tax hikes of 10-20% due to reassessments from nearby developments, alongside pressure to sell for housing projects. This could lead to lawsuits claiming unfair taxation or violations of equal protection under federal law. The current ULURP system allows community input to mitigate such financial harms, protecting homeowners.
4. Flood Zone Property Takeovers Without Sufficient Say: In flood-prone areas like Tottenville, resiliency projects like voluntary flood buyouts could allow the city to acquire properties under the pretext of safety, with minimal homeowner input. The designation of small or undevelopable lots for government acquisition is arbitrary and violates protections against property takings under the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause, risking federal lawsuits for inadequate compensation or coerced consent. The current ULURP system ensures community involvement, safeguarding property rights.
5. Quality of Life Impacts and Lawsuits: Increased housing projects could bring more traffic, noise, and strain on local services like schools and parks, degrading Tottenville's suburban character and exacerbating flooding risks. These changes could devalue properties, fueling lawsuits under state law for damages from altered neighborhood aesthetics and functionality. The current ULURP system allows residents to challenge harmful projects.
6. Fair Housing Act: The Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.) mandates equal access to housing for all people, not just specific groups. Rushed approvals of large housing projects could disproportionately harm existing homeowners by devaluing properties and altering community character, potentially violating the Act's equal access mandate and leading to claims of discriminatory impact. The current ULURP system ensures equitable consideration of all residents' concerns.

Case Scenarios: 45-Foot Buildings Towering Over Homes: A 45-foot apartment building next to your home could block sunlight, reduce views, and devalue your property by 5-10%, prompting lawsuits under state property law or Fourteenth Amendment due process violations for unfair zoning. Silencing the Mayor and Community: The Land Use Appeals Board, by eliminating the Mayor's veto power, renders the city's highest elected official powerless and could approve large projects against community wishes, violating due process and sparking federal civil rights litigation. Skyrocketing Taxes and Forced Sales: Larger landowners could face tax hikes of 10-20% or pressure to sell for housing projects, leading to lawsuits for equal protection violations or unfair taxation. City Takeovers in Flood Zones: The city could arbitrarily designate small or undevelopable lots in Tottenville for acquisition, violating the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause and triggering federal lawsuits for lack of just compensation or due process. Overcrowding and Infrastructure Collapse: Increased density could overwhelm local services, worsen flooding, and reduce property values, fueling lawsuits for damages from unchecked development. Potential Federal Law and Civil Rights Violations These proposals at a minimum risk violating:

- Fifth Amendment (Takings Clause): Arbitrary acquisition of small/undevelopable lots in flood zones could constitute physical takings, requiring just compensation.
- Fifth Amendment (Due Process Clause): The Land Use Appeals Board's override of local opposition and elimination of the Mayor's veto power denies homeowners and the city's highest elected official due process.
- Fourteenth Amendment (Due Process Clause): Lack of meaningful community input violates procedural due process.
- Fourteenth Amendment (Equal Protection Clause): Disproportionate tax burdens on larger landowners could be deemed discriminatory.
- Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.): Rushed approvals could disproportionately harm existing homeowners, violating equal access mandates for all.

Why the Current System Works The current ULURP process empowers Staten Island residents, especially in Tottenville, through local council member deference and Community Board input. It aligns with the Fifth Amendment and Fair Housing Act, protecting property values and ensuring equal access to housing processes for all. The proposed changes falsely promise influence while centralizing power, risking federal lawsuits over devaluation and civil rights violations. We urge the Commission to reject these changes and preserve the current ULURP system. Sincerely, Eric Knutsen Concerned Staten Islander

ATTN Commissioners:

I am writing to you today to implore you to cease all work on jungle primary proposals. This is a system that the public has shown it does not want. The rejection of this reform in six states last year—Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota—is a powerful and recent example. It shows a broad consensus that the current party-based primary system is preferred. This commission should respect the will of the people and turn its attention to more viable and popular reforms, such as the adoption of even-year elections.

Best,

Deena Heller

Comments: I am writing to oppose the adoption of an open primary system in NYC elections. In general, I believe primaries serve a sorting function within a party that stands for a particular set of believes and policies. Open primaries distort that to a general popularity contest. This feels rushed and unnecessary at this point and I question the value of this kind of change just as we are getting the city used to rank choice voting. I urge you to reject this idea.

Comments: Dear Commission Members, As lifelong Staten Island residents, we are writing to strongly oppose the land use changes proposed in the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Final Report. Communities like Tottenville on the South Shore are being put at risk. These changes would fast-track large buildings in low-density areas with little to no community input. They strip away the current checks and balances—especially ULURP—which protect our neighborhoods and give residents a real voice. The idea of 45-foot buildings next to single-family homes is unacceptable. It threatens property values, quality of life, and the suburban character we chose to raise our families in. Even worse, removing the Mayor’s veto power and handing final say to a new Land Use Appeals Board leaves residents with no meaningful recourse. This isn’t just bad policy, it could also violate basic constitutional protections like due process, equal protection, and property rights under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. It opens the door to legal challenges the city shouldn’t have to face. We already pay enough in taxes. Now we’re being asked to give up local control too? We urge you to preserve the current ULURP system and reject these changes. Staten Islanders deserve a say in what happens in our own backyards. Sincerely, Paul & Lynn Savio

Dear Commission Members,

As lifelong Staten Island residents, we are writing to express our strong opposition to the land use changes proposed in the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Final Report.

Communities like Tottenville on the South Shore are directly at risk. These proposed changes would fast-track large-scale developments in low-density neighborhoods with little to no community input. They dismantle critical checks and balances-particularly ULURP-which currently safeguard our communities and give residents a real voice in what happens around them.

The prospect of 45-foot buildings rising beside single-family homes is deeply troubling. It threatens property values, undermines quality of life, and erodes the suburban character that families like ours intentionally chose. Even more concerning is the plan to remove the Mayor's veto power and hand final authority to a Land Use Appeals Board-effectively silencing the city's highest elected official and leaving local residents without meaningful recourse.

These aren't just poor planning decisions-they could violate fundamental constitutional protections, including due process, equal protection, and property rights under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. They will likely expose the city to unnecessary and costly legal challenges.

We already shoulder a heavy tax burden. Now we're being asked to surrender local control too? We urge you to preserve the existing ULURP process and reject these reckless changes. Staten Islanders deserve a real say in the future of our own communities.

Sincerely,

Paul & Lynn Savio

Hello,

The consistent pattern of billionaire backing for jungle primaries exposes their true agenda. This was evident with Mike Bloomberg's past efforts, and it remains a driving force today. These primaries function as a direct attack on municipal labor unions and other people's organizations that actively resist the privatization of government functions, such as education, and the systematic weakening of essential government agencies. The commission tasked with this "reform" conspicuously lacks any representation from labor unions or working people's interests. Josh Greenman's article in Vital City correctly identified the underlying motivation: to limit labor's influence, not to increase voter turnout. The idea that American workers have an "outsized influence" in politics, after decades of struggle, is demonstrably false. The Democratic Party primary is a critical space for working people to counter the dominance of wealth. This proposal is an attempt to erode that power.

Attention Commissioners,

We cannot treat our electorate like test subjects in a perpetual experiment. The introduction of RCV was a major shift. To follow it immediately with "Jungle Primaries" is to create an environment of electoral instability that is toxic to participation. Voters need to feel that the system is reliable and that their knowledge of how to vote will be relevant from one election to the next. This proposal shatters that sense of reliability and would undoubtedly lead to more citizens staying home on Election Day.

Comments: It's apparent that the proposal created by Adams and the NYC CRC is not about increasing affordability for low-income NYers. What is affordable has completely lost meaning thanks to the last two administrations, and if Adams has his way come November, not only will there be no affordable housing left, but no affordable communities for poor and working-class NYers. No one wants an expedited land use process and our communities will fight it, the CRC, and Adams tooth and nail.

We urge the Commission to reject these changes and preserve the current ULURP system. Sincerely, Karen M. Castellane Concerned Staten Islander

Comments: Dear Members of the NYC Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing to express my opposition to the potential ballot proposal for open primaries. Our city's recent adoption of the successful and popular ranked choice voting system and public finance campaign program is undermined by this Commission's proposal recommendation for open primaries. Your Commission was not convened to address changes to our city's electoral system, which already encourages strong participation from voters. Special interests can and will spend enormous sums to game open primary elections, weakening the role of matching funds approved by voters to encourage fair elections. Additionally, open primaries would suppress the right for duly registered political party members to use the ranked choice voting system to elect the best candidate for their party. It's clear that it would not benefit the city's electoral system to eliminate the role of primary elections within political parties and diminish the power of grassroots donations in favor of special interests. I strongly encourage the Commission to withdraw the open primaries ballot proposal. Thank you.

[EXTERNAL] Empowering Organizations to Boost Turnout

Hello Commissioners,

A commonsense approach to voter turnout relies on what is proven to work. Jungle primaries are a failed experiment. Moving to even-year primaries is a data-supported reform. At the heart of successful voter engagement are organized groups. Labor unions and political parties are the experts in the direct, personal outreach that is consistently shown to increase participation. Measures that would strip these groups of their autonomy or resources are antithetical to the goal of a larger electorate. Let's focus our efforts on supporting these indispensable engines of democracy.

Comments: Mike Caldera Redacted for privacy, Staten Island, NY 10307 Date: July 14,2025
Opposition Letter to the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission Re: Urgent Opposition to 2025
NYC Charter Changes – Protect Staten Island Homeowners’ Constitutional Rights and Community
Input Dear Members of the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission, We, the residents of Staten Island, particularly in low-density communities like Tottenville on the South Shore, strongly oppose the proposed changes in the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission Final Report. These changes threaten our quality of life, property rights, and constitutional protections under the Fifth Amendment, which states, “nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.” The proposed amendments, under the guise of promoting “fair and equitable housing,” falsely promise community empowerment while stripping taxpayers of their say, rendering the Mayor—the highest-ranking city official elected by the people of New York City—powerless, and risking violations of federal laws, including the Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.), which mandates equal access to housing for all people. We demand the preservation of the current Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) to protect our neighborhoods and prevent costly lawsuits. Main reasons for opposition:

1. Overdevelopment with Large Buildings Without Community Input: The Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracking of housing projects could allow 45-foot-tall buildings next to single-family homes in low-density areas like Tottenville, with minimal community input. These towering structures would destroy our suburban character, block sunlight, and devalue properties by an estimated 5-10% (based on overdevelopment studies), prompting lawsuits under state property law for damages or Fourteenth Amendment due process violations due to unfair zoning processes. The current ULURP system ensures community oversight, preventing such drastic changes without resident consent.
2. Loss of Local Control Through the Land Use Appeals Board: The proposed Land Use Appeals Board, would replace the Mayor's veto power over City Council land use decisions, rendering the Mayor—the highest-ranking city official elected by all New Yorkers—powerless. This shift centralizes authority in a board that could override local opposition, silencing residents and local council members. This violates Fourteenth Amendment due process rights by denying homeowners a meaningful opportunity to be heard, risking federal civil rights lawsuits. The current ULURP system, with its balance of local and mayoral input, ensures fairness and must be preserved.
3. Financial Burdens and Property Tax Hikes: Larger landowners could face tax hikes of 10-20% due to reassessments from nearby developments, alongside pressure to sell for housing projects. This could lead to lawsuits claiming unfair taxation or violations of equal protection under federal law. The current ULURP system allows community input to mitigate such financial harms, protecting homeowners.
4. Flood Zone Property Takeovers Without Sufficient Say: In flood-prone areas like Tottenville, resiliency projects like voluntary flood buyouts could allow the city to acquire properties under the pretext of safety, with minimal homeowner input. The designation of small or undevelopable lots for government acquisition is arbitrary and violates protections against property takings under the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause, risking federal lawsuits for inadequate compensation or coerced consent. The current ULURP system ensures community involvement, safeguarding property rights.
5. Quality of Life Impacts and Lawsuits: Increased housing projects could bring more traffic, noise, and strain on local services like schools and parks, degrading Tottenville's suburban character and exacerbating flooding risks. These changes could devalue properties, fueling lawsuits under state law for damages from altered neighborhood aesthetics and functionality. The current ULURP system allows residents to challenge harmful projects.
6. Fair Housing Act: The Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.) mandates equal access to housing for all people, not just specific groups. Rushed approvals of large housing projects could disproportionately harm existing homeowners by devaluing properties and altering community character, potentially violating the Act's equal access mandate and leading to claims of discriminatory impact. The current ULURP system ensures equitable consideration of all residents' concerns.

Case Scenarios: 45-Foot Buildings Towering Over Homes: A 45-foot apartment building next to your home could block sunlight, reduce views, and devalue your property by 5-10%, prompting lawsuits under state property law or Fourteenth Amendment due process violations for unfair zoning. Silencing the Mayor and

Community: The Land Use Appeals Board, by eliminating the Mayor's veto power, renders the city's highest elected official powerless and could approve large projects against community wishes, violating due process and sparking federal civil rights litigation. Skyrocketing Taxes and Forced Sales: Larger landowners could face tax hikes of 10-20% or pressure to sell for housing projects, leading to lawsuits for equal protection violations or unfair taxation. City Takeovers in Flood Zones: The city could arbitrarily designate small or undevelopable lots in Tottenville for acquisition, violating the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause and triggering federal lawsuits for lack of just compensation or due process. Overcrowding and Infrastructure Collapse: Increased density could overwhelm local services, worsen flooding, and reduce property values, fueling lawsuits for damages from unchecked development. Potential Federal Law and Civil Rights Violations These proposals at a minimum risk violating: • Fifth Amendment (Takings Clause): Arbitrary acquisition of small/undevelopable lots in flood zones could constitute physical takings, requiring just compensation. • Fifth Amendment (Due Process Clause): The Land Use Appeals Board's override of local opposition and elimination of the Mayor's veto power denies homeowners and the city's highest elected official due process. • Fourteenth Amendment (Due Process Clause): Lack of meaningful community input violates procedural due process. • Fourteenth Amendment (Equal Protection Clause): Disproportionate tax burdens on larger landowners could be deemed discriminatory. • Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.): Rushed approvals could disproportionately harm existing homeowners, violating equal access mandates for all. Why the Current System Works The current ULURP process empowers Staten Island residents, especially in Tottenville, through local council member deference and Community Board input. It aligns with the Fifth Amendment and Fair Housing Act, protecting property values and ensuring equal access to housing processes for all. The proposed changes falsely promise influence while centralizing power, risking federal lawsuits over devaluation and civil rights violations. We urge the Commission to reject these changes and preserve the current ULURP system. Sincerely, Jenn Gigliotti Concerned Staten Islander

Comments: Hello, I just want to share that I am very excited that the Commission's Interim Report listened to community input and included land use reforms that would help address the city's housing shortage by making it faster and easier to build more housing, especially in the places that have said "no" to new housing for decades. Everyone in this city has known for years that we are in a deep and ever worsening housing crisis which threatens the financial well-being and housing stability of millions of New Yorkers. The voters of this city have demonstrated that they are fed up with the status quo and want to see things change rapidly and significantly. We need to push hard and not let up on any one aspect of reform to build more homes. To be clear, I am 100% in favor of fast tracking publicly financed affordable housing projects, simplifying the review of modest housing and infrastructure projects, establishing a land use appeals board with council, borough, and citywide voices, and modernizing the city map for planning purposes.

Comments: no big buildings in Tottenville. The 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission is pushing changes that destroys our neighborhoods, silence our voices, and eliminates our rights! They want to fast-track 45-foot apartment buildings next to our homes, strip the next Mayor's veto powers, and let the city take over flood zone properties in places like Tottenville

Comments: I'm writing about the proposal to have open primaries in NYC. While I understand the reasoning behind the proposal, it is not the right way to solve the issue of disenfranchised independents in the city. Yes, the Democratic primary is the real election in NYC due to the significant Democratic majority, but opening the Democratic Primary to everyone else is short-sighted. At the end of the day, if someone is independent, it means they do not like the Democratic Party or the Republican Party; otherwise, they would join them. So, to allow them to vote in the Democratic Primary doesn't solve the issue of Independents feeling, as neither party represents them. Instead, the Commission should ask, "How do we increase the viability of more parties in NYC in order to give more options to everyone, including independents?" We have some solutions to that. One, make the general RCV as well. This will enable smaller parties to participate in the general election, potentially leading to more parties emerging (either independently or from the two major parties). Two, make the Council elections "party-list proportional representation." This will ensure that every single vote is counted and every single vote counts, leading to smaller parties having representation in the council. These parties can then build legitimacy and possibly even run for mayor. Making primaries open does not solve the issue of disenfranchisement we have; all it does is destroy the point of parties: for a group of people to organize together and present to everyone else their vision.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. As a Brooklyn resident, and member of CB 8 Land Use and Transportation committees, I'm writing to express strong support for Proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, to make New York City more livable and democratically representative. I support Proposals 1-4 to fast track housing, simplify review, strike a better balance in the land use process, and digitize the City Map. The city's housing shortage requires action, these incremental steps are vital. Proposal 1 would make it easier and faster to produce housing, lowering costs and ensuring that all neighborhoods contribute to solving this crisis. This reform is long overdue and essential to reversing the tide of displacement. Proposal 2 would streamline the approval process for smaller rezonings that add housing, protect against flooding, and create open space. These are exactly the kinds of projects that should not be delayed by process, and this proposal would allow the city to respond more nimbly to urgent infrastructure and climate needs. The current system of member deference gives individual councilmembers outsized power to block citywide priorities.

Proposal 3's new Appeals Board would ensure that development decisions reflect borough-wide and citywide considerations- not just the narrowest political interests. A unified City Map is a step in the right direction, since the current system can impose significant costs and time on infrastructure, housing, and other projects. Proposal 4's Digital City Map would allow processes that today take months or even years to occur nearly instantly. I also support considering Open New York's recommendations for a fairer and more affordable NYC, many of which are already very well-aligned with the commission's proposals. I encourage the commission to dedicate additional time to exploring Open New York's proposal to bring the housing shortage into landmarks decisions. Proposal 5 would have a one cycle disruption, but would be net positive: moving local elections to even years would save the city money and increase turnout, especially among younger voters, working-class communities, and voters of color. This reform would help ensure that the voices shaping local government reflect the full diversity of our city. I strongly encourage the Commission to move forward with Proposal 6. Open primaries would enfranchise the 1 million+ New Yorkers who are currently locked out of primary elections due to party registration rules. These voters deserve a voice in the elections that matter most in our one-party-dominated city. Open primaries would boost turnout in local elections, increase electoral competition, and encourage candidates to appeal to a broader cross-section of voters. I urge the Commission to put all six measures on the November ballot so that voters can weigh in. Sincerely, Scott Weinstein Crown Heights 11238

Comments: New York City has a housing crisis and desperately needs new tools to prevent displacement and unlock housing in communities that don't produce enough, particularly tools for projects that include affordable housing, and to not allow sites chosen for housing developments to be inequitably changed to a different community district. Community boards and council members should not be able to block new housing because it doesn't fit into their vision of what their neighborhood should look like - the housing crisis is a citywide issue that must be addressed thusly and not by prejudiced and biased un-elected public servants and council members. NYC voter participation has declined drastically, in the 1970s and 1980s participation was at 50% but registered voter turnout has not exceeded 40% in a mayoral election since 2001 and has been below 30% in every mayoral election since 2009, and in 2021, just 23% of NYC registered voters participated in the general election. Good government groups such as Common Cause and Citizens Union say that moving NYC elections to even years would increase voter participation and allow younger voters and voters of color, especially Latino communities, to be better represented in high-turnout, even-year elections, and that having open primaries will allow the almost one million unaffiliated voters who cannot vote in party primaries to vote in our primaries, which are effectively where elections are decided, and will almost certainly increase voter turnout. That is why I support all of the Commission's proposed questions, along with its tentative question to have open primaries.

[EXTERNAL] Voters Deserve Better Than Jungle Primaries

Commissioners,

Voters simply do not like jungle primaries. These reforms are ineffective and are routinely rejected. Mayor Bloomberg's attempt in New York in 2003 was dismissed 70-30%. Last year, it failed in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota. This widespread rejection shows voters' appreciation for political parties. This commission should not waste time and money on an unpopular proposition. If the aim is to increase turnout, stick with proven methods like even-year elections.

Thanks,

Walter Weis

Comments: Opposition Letter to the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission Re: Urgent
Opposition to 2025 NYC Charter Changes – Protect Staten Island Homeowners’ Constitutional Rights and Community Input Dear Members of the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission, We,
the residents of Staten Island, particularly in low-density communities like Tottenville on the South Shore, strongly oppose the proposed changes in the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission Final Report. These changes threaten our quality of life, property rights, and constitutional protections under the Fifth Amendment, which states, “nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.” The proposed amendments, under the guise of promoting “fair and equitable housing,” falsely promise community empowerment while stripping taxpayers of their say, rendering the Mayor—the highest-ranking city official elected by the people of New York
City—powerless, and risking violations of federal laws, including the Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. §

3601 et seq.), which mandates equal access to housing for all people. We demand the preservation of the current Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) to protect our neighborhoods and prevent costly lawsuits. Main reasons for opposition:

1. Overdevelopment with Large Buildings Without Community Input: The Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracking of housing projects could allow 45-foot-tall buildings next to single-family homes in low-density areas like Tottenville, with minimal community input. These towering structures would destroy our suburban character, block sunlight, and devalue properties by an estimated 5-10% (based on overdevelopment studies), prompting lawsuits under state property law for damages or Fourteenth Amendment due process violations due to unfair zoning processes. The current ULURP system ensures community oversight, preventing such drastic changes without resident consent.
2. Loss of Local Control Through the Land Use Appeals Board: The proposed Land Use Appeals Board, would replace the Mayor's veto power over City Council land use decisions, rendering the Mayor—the highest-ranking city official elected by all New Yorkers—powerless. This shift centralizes authority in a board that could override local opposition, silencing residents and local council members. This violates Fourteenth Amendment due process rights by denying homeowners a meaningful opportunity to be heard, risking federal civil rights lawsuits. The current ULURP system, with its balance of local and mayoral input, ensures fairness and must be preserved.
3. Financial Burdens and Property Tax Hikes: Larger landowners could face tax hikes of 10-20% due to reassessments from nearby developments, alongside pressure to sell for housing projects. This could lead to lawsuits claiming unfair taxation or violations of equal protection under federal law. The current ULURP system allows community input to mitigate such financial harms, protecting homeowners.
4. Flood Zone Property Takeovers Without Sufficient Say: In flood-prone areas like Tottenville, resiliency projects like voluntary flood buyouts could allow the city to acquire properties under the pretext of safety, with minimal homeowner input. The designation of small or undevelopable lots for government acquisition is arbitrary and violates protections against property takings under the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause, risking federal lawsuits for inadequate compensation or coerced consent. The current ULURP system ensures community involvement, safeguarding property rights.
5. Quality of Life Impacts and Lawsuits: Increased housing projects could bring more traffic, noise, and strain on local services like schools and parks, degrading Tottenville's suburban character and exacerbating flooding risks. These changes could devalue properties, fueling lawsuits under state law for damages from altered neighborhood aesthetics and functionality. The current ULURP system allows residents to challenge harmful projects.
6. Fair Housing Act: The Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.) mandates equal access to housing for all people, not just specific groups. Rushed approvals of large housing projects could disproportionately harm existing homeowners by devaluing properties and altering community character, potentially violating the Act's equal access mandate and leading to claims of discriminatory impact. The current ULURP system ensures equitable consideration of all residents' concerns.

Case Scenarios: 45-Foot Buildings Towering Over Homes: A 45-foot apartment building next to your home could block sunlight, reduce views, and devalue your property by 5-10%, prompting lawsuits under state property law or Fourteenth Amendment due process violations for unfair zoning. Silencing the Mayor and Community: The Land Use Appeals Board, by eliminating the Mayor's veto power, renders the city's highest elected official powerless and could approve large projects against community wishes, violating due process and sparking federal civil rights litigation. Skyrocketing Taxes and Forced Sales: Larger landowners could face tax hikes of 10-20% or pressure to sell for housing projects, leading to lawsuits for equal protection violations or unfair taxation. City Takeovers in Flood Zones: The city could arbitrarily designate small or undevelopable lots in Tottenville for acquisition, violating the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause and triggering federal lawsuits for lack of just compensation or due process. Overcrowding and Infrastructure Collapse: Increased density could overwhelm local services, worsen flooding, and reduce property values, fueling lawsuits for damages from unchecked development. Potential Federal Law and Civil Rights Violations These proposals at a minimum risk violating:

- Fifth Amendment (Takings Clause): Arbitrary acquisition of small/undevelopable lots in flood zones could constitute physical takings, requiring just compensation.
- Fifth Amendment (Due Process Clause): The Land Use Appeals Board's override of local opposition and elimination of the Mayor's veto power denies homeowners and the city's highest elected official due process.
- Fourteenth Amendment (Due Process Clause): Lack of meaningful community input violates procedural due process.
- Fourteenth Amendment (Equal Protection Clause): Disproportionate tax burdens on larger landowners could be deemed discriminatory.
- Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.): Rushed approvals could disproportionately harm existing homeowners, violating equal access mandates for all.

Why the Current System Works The current ULURP process empowers Staten Island residents, especially in Tottenville, through local council member deference and Community Board input. It aligns with the Fifth Amendment and Fair Housing Act, protecting property values and ensuring equal access to housing processes for all. The proposed changes falsely promise influence while centralizing power, risking federal lawsuits over devaluation and civil rights violations. We urge the Commission to reject these changes and preserve the current ULURP system. Sincerely, Phyllis Cataldo Concerned Staten Islander

Comments: Dear Members of the NYC Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing to express my opposition to the potential ballot proposal for open primaries. Our city's recent adoption of the successful and popular ranked choice voting system and public finance campaign program is undermined by this Commission's proposal recommendation for open primaries. Your Commission was not convened to address changes to our city's electoral system, which already encourages strong participation from voters. Special interests can and will spend enormous sums to game open primary elections, weakening the role of matching funds approved by voters to encourage fair elections. Additionally, open primaries would suppress the right for duly registered political party members to use the ranked choice voting system to elect the best candidate for their party. It's clear that it would not benefit the city's electoral system to eliminate the role of primary elections within political parties and diminish the power of grassroots donations in favor of special interests. I strongly encourage the Commission to withdraw the open primaries ballot proposal. Thank you.

Dear Commissioners,

The New York City Charter Revision Commission should not advance a proposal to interfere with primary elections in New York City. The top issues that New Yorkers are voting on are affordability, cost of living and housing. The NYC Charter Revision Commission was initially convened to address the housing crisis, and it should make it its mandate to address these issues - not mess with our elections.

If the charter revision commission's goal is to drive up turnout in municipal elections, they should consider moving city elections to even-numbered years, aligned with new state law.

Thank you,
Jess Miller

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. As a resident of Brooklyn, I'm writing to express strong support for Proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, to make New York City more affordable and democratically representative. I support Proposals 1-4 to fast track affordable housing, simplify review, strike a better balance in the land use process, and digitize the City Map. The city's housing shortage demands bold action. Proposal 1 would make it easier and faster to produce affordable housing, lowering costs and ensuring that all neighborhoods contribute to solving this crisis. This reform is long overdue and essential to reversing the tide of displacement. Proposal 2 would streamline the approval process for smaller rezonings that add housing, protect against flooding, and create open space. These are exactly the kinds of projects that should not be delayed by red tape, and this proposal would allow the city to respond more nimbly to urgent infrastructure and climate needs. The current system of member deference gives individual councilmembers outsized power to block citywide priorities. Proposal 3's new Appeals Board would ensure that development decisions reflect borough-wide and citywide considerations- not just the narrowest political interests. A unified City Map is a step in the right direction, since the current system can impose significant costs and time on infrastructure, housing, and other projects. Proposal 4's Digital City Map would allow processes that today take months or even years to occur nearly instantly. I also support considering Open New York's recommendations for a fairer and more affordable NYC, many of which are already very well-aligned with the commission's proposals. I encourage the commission to dedicate additional time to exploring Open New York's proposal to bring the housing shortage into landmarks decisions. The proposal can be found here: <https://opennewyork.org/wp-content/uploads/2025/02/ONY-Charter-For-Housing-Equity.pdf>

Proposal 5 is a no-brainer: moving local elections to even years would save the city money and dramatically increase turnout, especially among younger voters, working-class communities, and voters of color. This reform would help ensure that the voices shaping local government reflect the full diversity of our city. I strongly encourage the Commission to move forward with Proposal 6. Open primaries would enfranchise the 1 million+ New Yorkers who are currently locked out of primary elections due to party registration rules. These voters deserve a voice in the elections that matter most in our one-party-dominated city. Open primaries would boost turnout in local elections, increase electoral competition, and encourage candidates to appeal to a broader cross-section of voters. I urge the Commission to put all six measures on the November ballot so that voters can weigh in.

To Whom It May Concern,

The adoption of jungle primaries would further entrench the power of the wealthy elite in our political system. It is a system tailor-made for candidates who can self-fund their campaigns or attract massive outside spending from corporate interests. This fundamentally disadvantages community-backed candidates and the labor unions that support them as a counterbalance to big money. We must protect the primary system as a cornerstone of our democracy, ensuring that organized people can still stand against the power of organized wealth. This change would be a significant step backward.

Sincerely,

Tine Byrsted

Comments: Question #2 This proposal is aimed at creating a streamlined review procedure for actions that will add modest amounts of additional housing, protect New York from flooding, and create new open space. The new process would be called the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure. While it boasts cutting public reviewing time in half for eligible projects and maintaining full community board review, it's vague. Sometimes a proposal can be so vague it should be struck down because of its vagueness. Such is the case here.

Comments: In Support of Open Top-Two Primaries: Open top-two primaries promote greater voter choice, reduce partisan polarization, and increase accountability. By allowing all voters—regardless of party affiliation—to vote for any candidate in a single primary, and advancing the top two vote-getters to the general election, this system encourages candidates to appeal to a broader electorate, not just their party base. It helps independents and moderates participate meaningfully in the democratic process and reduces the influence of extreme partisan factions. Ultimately, it strengthens representative democracy by incentivizing consensus-building and responsiveness to the entire electorate.

Greetings,

I am writing in support of proposed ballot measures 1-4 (the land use proposals) and against proposed measure 5 (the election proposals).

Re the first four, it is almost a given that housing construction has not kept pace with the demand and that this shortage is been a factor in high rents. Smoothing the path for building new housing is imperative. City of Yes—Housing made some progress in doing this and these charter proposals further that work.

One of the central features of the first two proposals is to eliminate the City Council vote. As the report correctly observes, such votes are, with very rare exceptions, little more than the council ratifying the wish of the member whose district a proposal is in. This can lead to inequitably disbursed housing and we've seen from the past couple of decades that simply building housing in a few parts of the city won't solve the housing shortage. The thresholds for what triggers the ELURP processes are low enough that major projects will still require council member approval. Further, the fact that community boards can still weigh in means that local input and knowledge will still be involved.

The filter for the first proposal is that the housing is affordable. HDFC-financed projects by their nature will entail affordable housing. These projects would also have to be consistent with the relevant zoning category. This is enhanced by the need for a BSA finding that the project be in character with the neighborhood. Affordable Housing Fast Track, by focusing on the laggard areas (the twelve community districts which produced the least affordable housing in a given period), will also balance out the effects of NIMBY areas.

The filter for the second question covers modest changes on a scale that shouldn't require a council member's approval to begin with. The move within low-density categories won't produce drastic changes while the 30% limit on FAR increase within high-density areas will also keep the more abrupt changes from coming under this. The report also makes the excellent point that it is precisely the smaller projects that are most likely to be deterred by the full-scale ULURP process and would most benefit from a streamlined one.

The same targeting of low-hanging fruit is covered by the proposal using ELURP for disposing of small plots of land or disposing of land to be used for affordable housing.

Re proposal #3, as I write this, we have a flash flood warning in NYC and I'm seeing pictures of flooded subways. As we become more vulnerable to climate events, being able to move quickly on resiliency projects—raising streets grades, buying property in flood-prone areas-

--becomes even more important and worthy of an expedited process.

I also favor question #4, using an appeal board in lieu of a mayoral veto. The borough president has an important voice in land use decisions and bringing them in at the end of the process in addition to the mayor and the council speaker allows for those views to be heard while balancing that by limiting it to projects in one borough and limiting it to either reversing a disapproval or undoing Council modifications.

I am strongly opposed, however, to proposal 5. Even-year elections would crowd what is often an already-crowded ballot and the election fatigue of tracking two sets of elections in one year would be worse than tracking smaller elections year and year. I also have a problem, speaking as someone who often volunteers for candidates.

I reserve even stronger opposition for so-called jungle primaries. First, it is shockingly premature to switch off an RCV system that has only had a couple of cycles. Some of the cross-endorsement and slate endorsements suggest that voters and organizations are adapting to RCV and learning how to leverage it. This is also shown in the increase in turnout over the last couple of elections. It would also be inconsistent with New York's system of fusion voting. Finally, due to the effective one-party nature of politics in most of the city, the path to getting representation for many working-class organizations has been to mobilize in the Democratic primary. This would short-circuit them.

Comments: Dear Members of the NYC Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing to express my opposition to the potential ballot proposal for open primaries. Our city's recent adoption of the successful and popular ranked choice voting system and public finance campaign program is undermined by this Commission's proposal recommendation for open primaries. Your Commission was not convened to address changes to our city's electoral system, which already encourages strong participation from voters. Special interests can and will spend enormous sums to game open primary elections, weakening the role of matching funds approved by voters to encourage fair elections. Additionally, open primaries would suppress the right for duly registered political party members to use the ranked choice voting system to elect the best candidate for their party. It's clear that it would not benefit the city's electoral system to eliminate the role of primary elections within political parties and diminish the power of grassroots donations in favor of special interests. I strongly encourage the Commission to withdraw the open primaries ballot proposal. Thank you. Jamilah Elder Woodside, NY

I write here in regard to the commission's proposed charter revision concerning misnamed "open" primaries.

First, a word on the commission itself. It is curious that the commission is able to propose draft text weeks in advance of the close of public comment, which signals that the text was already in development weeks or even months before that. This in turn signals to a veteran of technical writing in a bureaucratic setting that the public participation component is farcical and epiphenomenal, so please take appropriate shame in this. Proposing this bespoke text revision as commissioned by a mayor who has been subordinated to multiple antidemocratic regimes domestic and foreign is even more vexing, so for the sake of the integrity of the city's government, or at least the appearance of such, please decline to even include this revision in the package that the voters will consider. Try something more carefully considered in the future when the Union as a whole isn't under threat and no sitting member of the current commission is participating.

Next, to the content of the proposed revision. By way of preface and addressed to the two major political parties interested in this proposal, the familiar curse of a plague on both your houses. With that out of the way, layering a single top-two primary with ranked choice voting before a non-ranked general election in the same year continues to suffer from flaws identified in earlier notions of a similar change. This model is an intentional money pit, eliminating novelty in candidates and policy positions through sheer attrition. Without a fortune to spend there's no way to sustain a campaign that far, to say nothing of the strain on unpaid volunteers and organizers who still live in the city of perpetual housing "crisis" (that the other measures proposed by the commission won't remedy, but that's a matter for another commenter). The only beneficiaries of this model are the rent-seekers, both in the most literal rent-seeking class and those in the political consultant sphere.

The commission's feeble contention that "evidence from other jurisdictions is limited and suggests no clear relationship between political spending and open primaries" is humiliating to me, the reader, in its pathetic attempt to compare the state of Alaska to New York City. That entire state doesn't even have a third of the population of my borough, to say nothing of the multifarious other divergences in context. I accept that you strategically must assume that we are stupid enough to accept that given the proposal itself and the texture of democratic participation in the city in general, but please try to be serious.

I take no pleasure in denouncing the proposal (though I am sanguine in denouncing the commission), as I myself recently had to surrender my lifelong party unaffiliated status in order to satisfy my conscience that I did my part to eject Eric Adams from (my room and) the mayoralty, notwithstanding that he later begged off from the primary for his own soon-to-be-ex-party. The proposal as currently crafted, however, fails on the above criterion alone. This is good news for you, my correspondents, since I will not need to drag the other purported merits trumpeted in the hasty "interim" report.

Comments: Tom Redacted for privacy, Staten Island, NY 10307 Date: July 14, 2025 Opposition Letter to the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission Re: Urgent Opposition to 2025 NYC Charter Changes – Protect Staten Island Homeowners’ Constitutional Rights and Community Input Dear Members of the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission, We, the residents of Staten Island, particularly in low-density communities like Tottenville on the South Shore, strongly oppose the proposed changes in the 2025 NYC Charter Revision Commission Final Report. These changes threaten our quality of life, property rights, and constitutional protections under the Fifth Amendment, which states, “nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.” The proposed amendments, under the guise of promoting “fair and equitable housing,” falsely promise community empowerment while stripping taxpayers of their say, rendering the Mayor—the highest-ranking city official elected by the people of New York City—powerless, and risking

violations of federal laws, including the Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.), which mandates equal access to housing for all people. We demand the preservation of the current Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) to protect our neighborhoods and prevent costly lawsuits. Main reasons for opposition:

1. Overdevelopment with Large Buildings Without Community Input: The Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracking of housing projects could allow 45-foot-tall buildings next to single-family homes in low-density areas like Tottenville, with minimal community input. These towering structures would destroy our suburban character, block sunlight, and devalue properties by an estimated 5-10% (based on overdevelopment studies), prompting lawsuits under state property law for damages or Fourteenth Amendment due process violations due to unfair zoning processes. The current ULURP system ensures community oversight, preventing such drastic changes without resident consent.
2. Loss of Local Control Through the Land Use Appeals Board: The proposed Land Use Appeals Board, would replace the Mayor's veto power over City Council land use decisions, rendering the Mayor—the highest-ranking city official elected by all New Yorkers—powerless. This shift centralizes authority in a board that could override local opposition, silencing residents and local council members. This violates Fourteenth Amendment due process rights by denying homeowners a meaningful opportunity to be heard, risking federal civil rights lawsuits. The current ULURP system, with its balance of local and mayoral input, ensures fairness and must be preserved.
3. Financial Burdens and Property Tax Hikes: Larger landowners could face tax hikes of 10-20% due to reassessments from nearby developments, alongside pressure to sell for housing projects. This could lead to lawsuits claiming unfair taxation or violations of equal protection under federal law. The current ULURP system allows community input to mitigate such financial harms, protecting homeowners.
4. Flood Zone Property Takeovers Without Sufficient Say: In flood-prone areas like Tottenville, resiliency projects like voluntary flood buyouts could allow the city to acquire properties under the pretext of safety, with minimal homeowner input. The designation of small or undevelopable lots for government acquisition is arbitrary and violates protections against property takings under the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause, risking federal lawsuits for inadequate compensation or coerced consent. The current ULURP system ensures community involvement, safeguarding property rights.
5. Quality of Life Impacts and Lawsuits: Increased housing projects could bring more traffic, noise, and strain on local services like schools and parks, degrading Tottenville's suburban character and exacerbating flooding risks. These changes could devalue properties, fueling lawsuits under state law for damages from altered neighborhood aesthetics and functionality. The current ULURP system allows residents to challenge harmful projects.
6. Fair Housing Act: The Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.) mandates equal access to housing for all people, not just specific groups. Rushed approvals of large housing projects could disproportionately harm existing homeowners by devaluing properties and altering community character, potentially violating the Act's equal access mandate and leading to claims of discriminatory impact. The current ULURP system ensures equitable consideration of all residents' concerns.

Case Scenarios: 45-Foot Buildings Towering Over Homes: A 45-foot apartment building next to your home could block sunlight, reduce views, and devalue your property by 5-10%, prompting lawsuits under state property law or Fourteenth Amendment due process violations for unfair zoning. Silencing the Mayor and

Community: The Land Use Appeals Board, by eliminating the Mayor's veto power, renders the city's highest elected official powerless and could approve large projects against community wishes, violating due process and sparking federal civil rights litigation. Skyrocketing Taxes and Forced Sales: Larger landowners could face tax hikes of 10-20% or pressure to sell for housing projects, leading to lawsuits for equal protection violations or unfair taxation. City Takeovers in Flood Zones: The city could arbitrarily designate small or undevelopable lots in Tottenville for acquisition, violating the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause and triggering federal lawsuits for lack of just compensation or due process. Overcrowding and Infrastructure Collapse: Increased density could overwhelm local services, worsen flooding, and reduce property values, fueling lawsuits for damages from unchecked development. Potential Federal Law and Civil Rights Violations These proposals at a minimum risk violating:

- Fifth Amendment (Takings Clause): Arbitrary acquisition of small/undevelopable lots in flood zones could constitute physical takings, requiring just compensation.
- Fifth Amendment (Due Process Clause): The Land Use Appeals Board's override of local opposition and elimination of the Mayor's veto power denies homeowners and the city's highest elected official due process.
- Fourteenth Amendment (Due Process Clause): Lack of meaningful community input violates procedural due process.
- Fourteenth Amendment (Equal Protection Clause): Disproportionate tax burdens on larger landowners could be deemed discriminatory.
- Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.): Rushed approvals could disproportionately harm existing homeowners, violating equal access mandates for all.

Why the Current System Works The current ULURP process empowers Staten Island residents, especially in Tottenville, through local council member deference and Community Board input. It aligns with the Fifth Amendment and Fair Housing Act, protecting property values and ensuring equal access to housing processes for all. The proposed changes falsely promise influence while centralizing power, risking federal lawsuits over devaluation and civil rights violations. We urge the Commission to reject these changes and preserve the current ULURP system. Sincerely, Tom Pierce Concerned Staten Islander

Comments: Tottenville, Staten Island, Community OPPOSITION Letter: NO to any changes in ULURP. NO to further development on Staten Island. Our roads, transportation, schools, and businesses are NOT BUILT TO SUFFICIENTLY HANDLE any increase in traffic and population. We have ONE BUS and ONE TRAIN. We have ONE-LANE, WINDING STREETS. Streets are backed up with regular traffic all hours of the day and truck traffic cannot maneuver, causing further blocking. Homes and businesses are being built without sufficient parking, both driveway and on-street and without connecting sidewalks. NO to any plans that do not alleviate ALL of our limitations, not just housing.

Comments: I stand in qualified support of the Charter Revision Commission's proposed questions, especially digitization of the City Map and the ELURP process. I propose the following changes to the questions concerning elections: 1) Regarding even-year elections: Part of the reason for off-off-year elections for city offices is to ensure that national politics does not completely overwhelm the municipal debate. To the extent we have avoided that in the present day, it would be obliterated by the presidential campaign if we moved to even-year elections coinciding with the presidential election. I would much more prefer even-year races coinciding with the midterm elections, so that we elect a governor in the same year as a mayor, for example. 2) Regarding open primaries: Again, here I appreciate the principle (unlike my colleagues in the WFP) but the details need adjusting. The top-two primary, even with RCV in the first stage, stifles competition and debate across a wide array of candidates and can funnel a lesser-of-evils duo of choices to the general election. A better alternative is a modified Alaskan system: - An open "jungle primary" with a single transferable vote, with the top four advancing to the final round - A general election of these four candidates using ranked choice voting

Comments: I urge the Charter Revision Commission to use every lever at its disposal to streamline the approval of new homes: to ensure we build enough to lower rents for everyone, to even the playing field between big developers that can navigate byzantine processes and those currently kept out of competition, and to ensure equitable construction of new homes across all neighborhoods—not just less politically powerful ones. Proposals 1-4 are all laudable and well-considered. They should be put before voters in whatever form will maximize their impact.

Dear Members of the Charter Revision Commission,

Thank you for your dedicated work on the proposed 2025 NYC charter revisions. As a Manhattan resident and stakeholder in our city's future, I write to express my strong support for the commission's proposals and urge you to advance all measures to the ballot.

I particularly support Proposals 1, 2, 3, and 4. I would also like to urge the commission to adopt Proposal 6 in the strongest possible terms. While I feel less confident about Proposal 5, I believe NYC voters deserve the opportunity to decide on all measures.

Housing: The Foundation of NYC's Future

No issue is more critical to New York City's long-term health and prosperity than building the housing our residents need to live and thrive. Without substantial increases to our housing stock, NYC will continue pricing out existing residents, forcing them away from their jobs and communities. Rising rents also deny potential residents access to our city, breaking a powerful engine for upward mobility and economic growth.

Why These Proposals Matter

Proposals 1, 2, and 3 strategically shift more decision-making power to those who can advocate for citywide interests rather than narrow local concerns. All NYC residents benefit when we create the foundation for continued prosperity through increased housing supply.

Proposal 4 represents essential modernization. Bringing NYC's mapping systems into the 21st century will streamline planning processes, accelerate project approvals, and ensure taxpayers receive more efficient government services.

Proposal 6 deserves special emphasis as perhaps the most important measure. By implementing an open primary with ranked-choice voting, we can ensure elections more accurately reflect the diversity of viewpoints among NYC voters, leading to more representative and effective governance. This reform would strengthen democratic participation and produce leaders who better serve our city's varied communities.

Moving Forward

These proposals collectively address NYC's most pressing governance challenges while positioning our city for future success. I urge you to advance all measures to the November ballot, giving voters the opportunity to shape our city's future.

Thank you for your service and commitment to NYC's continued prosperity.

Sincerely,

Andrew Alzheimer, Manhattan Resident

Comments: I'm writing to express my opposition to the potential ballot proposal for open primaries. Our city's recent adoption of the successful and popular ranked choice voting system and public finance campaign program is undermined by this Commission's proposal recommendation for open primaries. Your Commission was not convened to address changes to our city's electoral system, which already encourages strong participation from voters. Special interests can and will spend enormous sums to game open primary elections, weakening the role of matching funds approved by voters to encourage fair elections. Additionally, open primaries would suppress the right for duly registered political party members to use the ranked choice voting system to elect the best candidate for their party. It's clear that it would not benefit the city's electoral system to eliminate the role of primary elections within political parties and diminish the power of grassroots donations in favor of special interests. I strongly encourage the Commission to withdraw the open primaries ballot proposal.

Comments: Last night NYC experienced torrential rain which flooded the roads and subways, making it dangerous for people to travel. In the past, we have had hurricanes and tropical storms that similarly inflicted severe damage and even led to death. In our area of central Queens, we have power outages and flooding regularly during typical rainstorms. So it's appalling to see the Charter Commission put forth three ballot proposals that aim to increase density without completing required environmental impact studies. Allowing for increased lot coverage will only increase stormwater runoff that leads to flooding, and allowing 30% more development for proposed projects means additional strain on the unreliable power grid. Our organization, Juniper Park Civic Association worked closely with the Department of City Planning to get contextual zoning that would minimize these issues as we lack the infrastructure that higher density areas have. The people who know neighborhoods best are its local residents, those who sit on community boards, and the council members they elect, and these ballot initiatives only serve to freeze them all out of land use decisions so that the entire city is at the mercy of developers. Questions 1-3 SHOULD NOT be up for a vote. Thank you.

Comments: I will focus on the first three proposals, in order of how bad they are for us. (ELURP = Expedited Land Use Review Process) Ballot Question #2: Under this proposal, in a nutshell, apartment buildings will be allowed in current low-density zones - EVERYWHERE. For reference, 45 feet tall apartment buildings at a 2.0 FAR is the equivalent of an R5D zone. This would allow, for example, a four-story apartment building with six units and no parking replacing a typical one-family house on a 40' x 100' lot in an R2 zone. Every current zone in this category would allow the height and density of the next highest zone - EVERYWHERE. Tall and dense buildings will become taller and denser. Ballot Question #3: This basically brings back the old Board of Estimate - which was abolished in 1989 for being unconstitutional and brought about our current form of government - in a slightly different version and eliminates Council Member deference, or the idea that if there's a project or rezoning in a Council Member's district that constituents are opposed to and that Council Member states opposition, the rest of the Council will respect that and vote against it. This would allow for this new "Appeals Board" to reverse the Council's decision. In reality, a developer wouldn't have to care as much about pleasing and negotiating with the local Council Member who reports directly to the affected constituents under this Appeals Board. Ballot Question #1: There will be increased targeted development steered to 20% of Community Boards on top of all of the regular development that we will see over that time. This is an idea that was part of Corey Johnson's Planning Together abomination that thankfully was killed in early 2022. It was a terrible idea then and remains one today. This directly targets most of the outer boroughs, especially those considered transit deserts. Neighborhoods without the transit, sewer and electrical infrastructure to support it. This will put strain on police, fire, sanitation, school, roads, and utilities. Ballot questions 1-3 should not move forward.

[EXTERNAL] Jungle Primaries = Guaranteed Voter Confusion

Attention Commissioners,

This is not the time for another grand electoral experiment. This is the time for stability. New Yorkers are still on the learning curve with Ranked-Choice Voting, a system implemented just a few years ago. Introducing "Jungle Primaries" now would be a profound disruption, creating unnecessary confusion and undermining the very idea of consistent electoral rules. It's a move guaranteed to frustrate voters and likely lead to lower turnout. Let's focus on making the system we have work better for everyone before we consider tearing it down.

Comments: To the Charter Revision Commission Members, I am sending this comment as a resident of NYC and Brooklyn in support of proposals 1-5. This city is in a housing crisis manufactured by years of overregulation and rules that focus more on process rather than outcome. I'm a psychiatrist who works with many single mothers in this city who are finding it nearly impossible to find housing in this city. Even with a voucher in hand these women are finding themselves out competed in a tight housing market. Reforming the ULURP process, weakening member deference, considering the housing needs of the city rather than each individual council district, and fast tracking mid height housing development will go a long way in easing the current shortage. Reforming the electoral process through open primaries and moving city elections to even years will help boost turnout and ensure our politicians are beholden to a broader swath of their constituents. Once again as a resident of this city that I love, as a psychiatrist, and as a citizen who regularly votes, I strongly support proposals 1-5. I appreciate your consideration. Regards, Dr. Lana Irons

Comments: I am excited about all five of the Commission's proposed questions. The city has made it too difficult to build new housing since 1961, and the proposed changes would help reform our calcified process. As a community board member (speaking as an individual), I have seen how the current process favors reactionary positions and blocking housing. In particular, I am excited that questions 1 and 2 would help generate new housing in the neighborhoods that have successfully blocked it for decades using the ULURP process, and that question 3 would offer a potential remedy to member deference. I am also excited about question 5, which would improve voter turnout and therefore be good for our city's democratic process. I am somewhat concerned about the Commission's plans to consider open primaries. I think that would offer the worst of both worlds for selecting candidates. I suggest that the Commission consider a different reform: ranked-choice general elections. The Commission should also consider proposing to eliminate primaries in favor of a single, nonpartisan general election, like San Francisco. Due to geographic partisan sorting, the primary is frequently the de facto election for most NYC offices. Moving the competitive election to align with not only with the even year but the specific day of general elections would boost turnout substantially. New York's fusional voting system is already set up well for this, as long as voters were allowed to rank all of the candidates, not just five. If the Commission decides to maintain primaries, they should be kept closed.

push out all the small landlords who do give affordable housing. You are lying to the people, NYC

Comments: Dear Members of the NYC Charter Revision Commission, I oppose the potential ballot proposal for open primaries. Our city's recent adoption of the successful and popular ranked choice voting system and public finance campaign program is undermined by this Commission's proposal recommendation for open primaries. Special interests can and will spend enormous sums to game open primary elections, weakening the role of matching funds approved by voters to encourage fair elections. Additionally, open primaries would suppress the right for duly registered political party members to use the ranked choice voting system to elect the best candidate for their party. It's clear that it would not benefit the city's electoral system to eliminate the role of primary elections within political parties and diminish the power of grassroots donations in favor of special interests. I strongly encourage the Commission to withdraw the open primaries ballot proposal. Thank you.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission: Thank you for receiving these comments. I wanted to write in to express my strong support for all of the proposals from this year's Charter Revision Commission; I hope to see all of them on this year's ballot. In particular, the housing challenges in this city are acute, and I can see how each of proposals 1-4 would help alleviate and address those problems. I would love to see steps like these taken to help more people live and stay in the city. I also strongly support proposals 5 and 6. Proposal 5 (even number years) seems like an easy win - everything is easier for the city to organize, for voters to participate, and therefore would help democratic participation in our local government. Proposal 6 also seems like a clear win - rather than limit ourselves to the national lines of our political parties, it would ensure that candidates truly need to speak to everyone in New York City, which seems like a good way to ensure we get the representation we deserve. Sincerely, Anthony Liu Jackson Heights 11372

Comments: Given the severe shortage of housing in this city (and affordable housing in particular), I strongly support giving voters the option to weigh in on fast-track processes for development and revising the current ULURP process. The city has had ample time to debate and discuss these ideas (spurred by the Adams' administrations City of Yes proposal spotlighting current bottlenecks in housing development), and I think the time to wrap up these debates and vote is now. Thank you for your time and consideration! Chris Sebastian Bay Ridge

Comments: The selection of Zohran Mamdani has brought hope to countless believers in democracy who vote in the United States. Please don't move to an open primary system as this would disadvantage already disadvantaged groups of voters within the city. Ranked-choice voting, public financing, and grassroots power have brought NYC closer to a true democracy. Please continue to cherish and strive for democracy in the city I called home for nearly two years and still love. Thank you.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. As a current Brooklyn resident, I'm writing to express strong support for Proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, to make New York City more affordable and democratically representative. I support Proposals 1-4 to fast track affordable housing, simplify review, strike a better balance in the land use process, and digitize the City Map. The city's housing shortage demands bold action. Proposal 1 would make it easier and faster to produce affordable housing, lowering costs and ensuring that all neighborhoods contribute to solving this crisis. This reform is long overdue and essential to reversing the tide of displacement. Proposal 2 would streamline the approval process for smaller rezonings that add housing, protect against flooding, and create open space. These are exactly the kinds of projects that should not be delayed by red tape, and this proposal would allow the city to respond more nimbly to urgent infrastructure and climate needs. The current system of member deference gives individual councilmembers outsized power to block citywide priorities. Proposal 3's new Appeals Board would ensure that development decisions reflect borough-wide and citywide considerations- not just the narrowest political interests. A unified City Map is a step in the right direction, since the current system can impose significant costs and time on infrastructure, housing, and other projects. Proposal 4's Digital City Map would allow processes that today take months or even years to occur nearly instantly. I also support considering Open New York's recommendations for a fairer and more affordable NYC, many of which are already very well-aligned with the commission's proposals. I encourage the commission to dedicate additional time to exploring Open New York's proposal to bring the housing shortage into landmarks decisions. Proposal 5 is a no-brainer: moving local elections to even years would save the city money and dramatically increase turnout, especially among younger voters, working-class communities, and voters of color. This reform would help ensure that the voices shaping local government reflect the full diversity of our city. I strongly encourage the Commission to move forward with Proposal 6. Open primaries would enfranchise the 1 million+ New Yorkers who are currently locked out of primary elections due to party registration rules. These voters deserve a voice in the elections that matter most in our one-party-dominated city. Open primaries would boost turnout in local elections, increase electoral competition, and encourage candidates to appeal to a broader cross-section of voters. I urge the Commission to put all six measures on the November ballot so that voters can weigh in. Sincerely, Jessica Havens Sunset Park, 11220

Comments: I want to express my strong opposition to the proposed adoption of a so-called "jungle primary" system for New York City elections. First, jungle primaries erase the strategic foundation grassroots groups rely on: party primaries. Grassroots groups spend years organizing within the Democratic Party to win representation for their communities. They build coalitions, recruit candidates, and develop long-term strategies to shift power from political machines to the people. A jungle primary blows that up. In a top-two or top-four system, there is no party primary. Every candidate, regardless of party or values, appears on one crowded ballot. That forces grassroots candidates to compete in massive, often expensive fields—splitting the vote and making it far harder for community-backed candidates to break through. Second, jungle primaries amplify the power of money over organizing. In a high-candidate, low-information race without party cues, the winners are usually those with the biggest war chests, the most name recognition, or the backing of wealthy interests. Grassroots groups can't compete with that kind of money. Their strength is people-powered campaigns that build trust over time—not six-figure media buys and insider endorsements/ Jungle primaries put movement candidates at a severe disadvantage and tilt the playing field back toward the very institutions grassroots organizing seeks to challenge. Third, this system would discourage long-term community organizing. One of the most powerful aspects of our current system is that it gives communities clear political targets: party primaries where their votes and their organizing can make a real difference. That's how working-class tenants have elected champions. It's how immigrant neighborhoods have shifted city policy. Jungle primaries scramble those lines, make electoral pathways murky, and take power away from communities that have only recently begun to claim it.

Comments: To the NYC Charter Revision Commission, I see no reason to allow for open primaries, as they will lead to a chaotic electoral process. We'll see a larger than anticipated swath of one party that has no interest in a primary's candidates disrupt the intended party's election. They will also likely outnumber Independents that had hoped to contribute to the process; I expect you want to change the charter to give Independents more of a voice, even though studies show this does not actually work to benefit them. The beauty of the closed primary process, just as with a candidate's campaign, is for one party to convince Independents or Third party voters to reregister them and bring them into your tent. Ideal electoralism is just that and, given the surge of new voters in the last election, it's clear we're headed in that direction.

Richard Buery Jr., Chair, and Members of the Charter Revision Commission
New York, NY

RE: Testimony on the Charter
Revision Commission

Dear Chair Buery and Commissioners:

My firm regularly consults with community groups, Community Boards, architects and landowners on the New York City Zoning Resolution. I assisted five Manhattan Community Boards in their review of your preliminary report. I have 30 years of experience as a planner and have been a certified planner for more than 25 years. This testimony is my own and touches solely on land use issues.

My experience with land use issues in New York City is through the practical work of reviewing and preparing land use applications, rezonings and citywide zoning text amendments. This work can begin in pre-ULURP stages and follow through to the Council's vote. Yet, my experience is largely at odds with much of the testimony you've heard during your hearings.

Before we revise the Charter's land use processes, it is critical to start with the reality of how they operate in practice. There are statements in the Commission's preliminary report that do not reflect current data and operating practices. I'd like to provide the Commission with correct information in hopes that it can be considered in your final decision-making and corrected in an amended final report.

Consider this quote from your preliminary report (p. 39):

"Today, ULURP frequently requires the same costly multi-year process of environmental and land use review for a new eight-unit apartment building as for an 800-unit apartment building. As such, ULURP applications tend to be for big changes rather than small ones, . . . ."

This statement is simply not true. First, I encourage the Commission to simply leaf through recent ULURP applications. You will see that many, if not most, ULURP applications are for small projects. Further, it is false to say that the pre-ULURP process for an eight-unit building is the same as one for a 800-unit building. While they would have the same ULURP process, their pre-ULURP requirement would be different. An eight-unit building would require an environmental assessment, while an 800-unit building would likely require a full environmental impact statement. These are completely different levels of effort in terms of both time and money. As this is a statement that is simply not true, I'm extremely concerned that your Commission is basing your recommendations on flawed information.

To be clear, I'm in agreement that there are ways to improve and create more efficiencies within our current land use process. For instance, the tiny scraps of land that the City owns that are too small for a productive purpose should not need ULURP for disposition. But the real problem with the land use process in New York City is the pre-ULURP process for all land use applications, regardless if it's a ULURP action. The BLAST process suggested changes to the pre-ULURP process, but clearly, not all those changes have been implemented or implemented evenly, leaving it an uncertain and unpredictable process. In addition to clear direction from DCP, applicants need to have the predictability of a process where requirements do not change mid-process. That is not the case today. I will illustrate my point with a recent personal experience.

I prepared one of the many small ULURP applications your report overlooks. The application proposed to extend the boundary of a Special Purpose District part of one block. We had our first pre-application meeting for the Special Lincoln Square District Extension (ULURP number: 240144ZMM) in December 2018. We called it a pre-pre-application meeting because we wanted to describe the idea to DCP to see if the Department would even entertain the application. They had no issues and encouraged the application.

Our formal pre-application meeting took place the next year, in October 2019. Again, DCP had no issues and gave us instructions for preparing a pre-application statement, which was submitted in April 2020, followed up with a meeting in May 2020. DCP documented the meeting with an interdivisional meeting record dated June 15, 2020, which outlined the steps required to complete the land use application.

In August 2020, we submitted a draft Reasonable Worst Case Development Scenario (RWCDs). After much back-and-forth, DCP accepted a revised RWCDs in August 2021. In February 2022, we submitted an EAS, which was rejected. DCP needed much more detail than we expected but they provided a model for us to follow, which defined their expectations. We completed a revised EAS in March 2023, which was posted on the Zoning Application Portal. DCP required further revisions and a revised EAS was completed in November 2023 and the project was "Noticed," which means ULURP would start in at least 30 days. In January 2024, we received trivial comments from DCP and we believed we would be starting ULURP by February 2024.

Instead, in 2024, after DCP spent five years working with us to complete our application, DCP's Executive Director told us they would not certify the application because it was not consistent with their planning policies. We had dozens of communications and meetings over the years it took to complete the application, yet DCP waited until the application was complete to tell the applicants they would not advance the proposal into ULURP.

Clearly, there is a problem with the land use process in NYC, but trying to solve lengthy application times by cutting public review ignores the crucial issue. DCP's requirements shift and change over time, which means that applicants have no certainty. Changing the projects that qualify for ULURP or moving certain types of applications to other agencies that do not have the necessary capacity or expertise will not change the culture and practice at the Department. Amending the Charter cannot fix the main problem, which is pre-ULURP and all that happens outside the public process.

We need charter revision that strengthens democracy, increases accountability and empowers the public to help guide development and to make a City we all want and deserve. Unfortunately, your recommendations will do nothing to address the most pressing problem and would likely make our land use process less democratic and more opaque.

Sincerely,

Hey,

We just implemented Ranked-Choice Voting, and this is simply too much change too soon. New Yorkers are still adapting to RCV, understanding how their preferences translate into results. To introduce "Jungle Primaries" now would negate the progress made in voter education. We are not even four years into RCV's existence since the 2019 referendum. Such rapid, successive changes don't encourage participation; they deter it. Voters need stability to build confidence in the electoral process, not a constant state of flux that makes them question their vote. Let RCV take root.

RE: Unified Opposition to the Proposed Elimination of Topographic Functions from the Borough Presidents' Offices

Dear Members of the Charter Revision Commission,

As the duly elected Borough Presidents of the City of New York, we write in united and unequivocal opposition to the proposal in the Charter Revision Commission Interim Report and Proposed Amendments to the New York City Charter, both dated July 1, 2025, to eliminate the topographic responsibilities from our offices. This recommendation reflects a fundamental misunderstanding of the nature, purpose, and value of this function and ignores the very real consequences its removal would have on neighborhoods across all five boroughs.

The Charter Revision Commission frames this proposal as an administrative streamlining measure yet fails to demonstrate how transferring topographic duties to another agency will improve efficiency, accuracy, or responsiveness. In fact, the Commission's report offers no evidence of systemic failure or inefficiency within the current borough-based Topographic Bureaus. On the contrary, these functions are a vital part of the City's land use, zoning, and infrastructure ecosystem, and are executed with the local precision, institutional knowledge, and community responsiveness that only borough-based governance can provide.

1. Erode Local Authority and Oversight

Topographic review is a critical tool for evaluating the impacts of land use decisions on the built environment. The mapping of streets, public places, easements, and utilities must reflect not just technical requirements but also local realities, many of which are not visible from citywide maps or planning frameworks. Without this function, the Borough Presidents' ability to engage in meaningful land use review would be substantially weakened. This work directly ties into reporting, such as the Borough Office's Annual Development Reports, which help determine and influence where resources should be allocated across each of the five boroughs.

2. Disrupt a System That Works

The Commission claims this change will reduce redundancy, yet there is no duplication today. Borough Topographic Bureaus work in coordination with, not in opposition to, city agencies. Eliminating them would only shift the burden onto centralized departments already stretched thin, increasing delays and decreasing responsiveness, particularly for communities where infrastructure is aging or geographically complex.

The timeframes and statistics listed in the report are grossly inaccurate for how the Borough Offices function. We have staffs that turn around City Map requests, address verifications, and street status letters with incredible efficiency due to their accumulated knowledge of their respective boroughs that could not be replicated if they were centralized. The drawn-out timeframes for City Map applications, that are stated in the report, are a function of unresponsive applicants and incomplete work that is sent to the Topographic Bureaus. The Topographic Bureaus turn around these revisions very quickly rather than getting backlogged into an agency queue of other projects. To speak of efficiencies is to assume DCP could do it quicker and DCP has proven through this very Charter Revision Commission Interim Report that their pre-certification process has its own inefficiencies due to the large pipeline of projects they process, whereas the Borough Presidents' Topographic Bureaus are able to expedite and streamline these City Map requests.

3. Centralize Decision-Making Without Accountability

Topographic review is often the only layer of technical scrutiny that ensures infrastructure decisions are not only compliant but context-sensitive. Consolidating these responsibilities into citywide agencies would make it harder for residents and stakeholders to access information, raise concerns, and engage with decision-makers who understand their neighborhoods. Our Topographic Bureaus have office hours that allow anyone from the public to come in and speak to someone who will assist them immediately. This function would be removed if centralized at DCP, and public assistance would become far more cumbersome and significantly delayed. This is directly relevant for address applications because many homeowners are the ones who file these applications and they have limited knowledge on how to navigate a complex agency, which may require them to hire consultants, adding time and cost to a relatively simple process today. Each Topographic Bureau receives hundreds of applications each year; altogether, the five boroughs receive approximately 3,000 address applications per year, averaging between 10 to 15 applications per business day, many of which are from residents without technical skills and require assistance. Centralizing this work would make it difficult for these homeowners to receive that assistance as well as create additional time and cost burdens compared to each borough being able to provide direct support.

4. Undermine the Charter's Promise of Borough Representation

Topographic responsibilities are not just administrative; they are foundational to our role as borough advocates. This function ensures that decisions about physical development are not made in isolation from the communities they affect. Its removal represents a step backward in the evolution of local democracy and cuts against the stated goal of improving government responsiveness.

5. Ignore the Real Need: Modernization, Not Elimination

If there are opportunities to digitize, coordinate, or better integrate topographic work with broader planning systems, we welcome that conversation. But modernization should not be conflated with elimination. Reform should build capacity, not erase it. Our Topographic Bureaus have regularly worked together with agencies such as DCP, DEP, DOB, DOT, DPR, and DDC for decades, and we will continue embracing those relationships and working to make our systems more efficient, but any problems identified in the report would not be fixed by centralizing this work. Additionally, the City's Administrative Code has limits on how the Topographic Bureaus are able to modernize and updating this language would allow for some additional positive changes.

The Charter is not just a governing document; it is a statement of values. It must affirm the importance of local voice, technical expertise, and democratic checks and balances. The removal of topographic functions runs counter to all three.

We call on the Commission to rescind this proposal and recognize the indispensable role that Borough Presidents play in shaping the physical, social, and environmental fabric of this city. The work we do through our Topographic Bureaus is not obsolete, it is essential.

Sincerely,

[EXTERNAL] The Flaws of the Jungle Primary System

To Whom It May Concern,

The debate over jungle primaries should be over. Voters have consistently shown their disapproval. The proposal's failure in six states last year—Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota—is the latest and most powerful evidence. It demonstrates a widespread belief that political parties are essential to the democratic process. This commission should not waste its political capital on an idea that has been so clearly and recently rejected by the American public. A much better use of your time would be to promote proven turnout-boosting measures like even-year elections.

Best,

Marlon Regis

Comments: NYC Charter Revision Commission, I am writing to oppose ballot questions 1 through 3. These proposals will give power to unelected bureaucrats and developers . It takes away the rights of residents to have input in their own communities . It is selecting districts for upzoning . It is for development in low density neighborhoods across the city . It is taking away a process we have had . The new Appeals Board would override our representatives and eliminate the voices of our communities. How very undemocratic .Developers and special interests will be the only voices you hear. The changes to the ULURP process would take land away from City Council and give it to those not elected. Each councilmember knows their district . They will no longer have the ability to advocate for the residents of their district . The City of Yes passed , this is just a move to concentrate land use power to a few , rather than residents of NYC having a say in how our city is shaped . Special District and Historic Districts were exempt from the City of Yes and well as some flood zones . These exemptions should continue . City Island Special District should remain as such . City Island has been called a New England Seaport , the Gem of the Bronx . We are known for our seafood restaurants and welcome tens of thousands of visitors, from Spring to Fall , to dine and stroll our beautiful community . It is unique and that is why New Yorkers come to visit . People come to enjoy the quaint , charming and nautical village atmosphere . Why would you destroy that with out of character building , no parking ?Our community businesses generate many tax dollars for NYC . people don't want to come here to look at apartment buildings and no place to park while visiting . . Our residential dead end streets cannot fit more buildings without parking . Are you planning to build an evacuation site here to house people during hurricanes , storms ,flooding and blackouts ? Address climate change ?Address infrastructure ?You can't build , flood us and then backtrack . So please leave our special district zoning in place and the ability for our representatives to actually represent us . Thank You, Cathy Cebek City Island Resident VP of the City Island Civic Association

Upzoning and eliminating low-density communities in New York City are often proposed as solutions to the housing affordability crisis. However, while increasing housing supply is important, this approach alone is not a panacea. Below are several key reasons why upzoning and removing low-density neighborhoods may not effectively address NYC's affordability crisis—and could even exacerbate some issues:

1. New Construction ≠ Affordable Housing

- Market-rate housing dominates upzoned areas. Developers often build luxury or high-end market-rate units because they are more profitable, especially in newly upzoned neighborhoods.
- Trickle-down affordability is slow and unreliable. The idea that building more high-end units will eventually reduce prices overall has limited empirical support, especially in strong-demand markets like NYC.

2. Gentrification and Displacement Risks

- Upzoning can accelerate gentrification. Allowing taller buildings in low-density areas can attract luxury development, which increases land values and property taxes, displacing long-term renters and working-class homeowners.
- Existing affordable units may be lost. Redevelopment often demolishes older, rent-stabilized or naturally affordable housing stock.

3. Affordability Crisis Is Also an Income Crisis

- Stagnant wages and rising rents are the core drivers of housing insecurity. Without addressing income inequality and wage stagnation, even increased supply won't make housing truly affordable for many low- and moderate-income New Yorkers.

4. Upzoning Doesn't Guarantee Inclusion

- Mandatory Inclusionary Housing (MIH) requirements are often too weak or allow for too many loopholes. Developers may opt for a limited number of "affordable" units set at 80% AMI (Area Median Income), which is still unaffordable for many working-class families in NYC.

5. Infrastructure Strain

- Public services like schools, transit, sanitation, and green space may not be scaled up at the same rate as population increases, worsening quality of life in newly dense areas.

6. Environmental and Climate Concerns

- Paving over green, low-density spaces can increase urban heat islands, reduce stormwater absorption, and strain ecological resources—especially in outer-borough neighborhoods that act as buffers to environmental stress.

7. Community Resistance and Political Backlash

- Ignoring local voices fuels NIMBYism (Not In My Backyard), political polarization, and lawsuits, all of which can delay or derail housing projects and sour public trust.

8. Speculation and Land Banking

- Upzoning often leads to land speculation. Investors may buy and hold land in anticipation of price increases rather than build, delaying housing production and driving up costs further.

9. Misallocation of Housing Types

- Mismatch between supply and demand. NYC needs more family-sized affordable units, but developers typically build studios and one-bedrooms targeting singles and young professionals.

10. Better Solutions Exist

- Preservation of existing affordable housing, deeper subsidies, expanded NYCHA investment, community land trusts, tenant protections, and income-based vouchers offer more direct paths to affordability.
- Zoning reform should be targeted—focused on underutilized commercial corridors, vacant lots, and transit-rich areas without destabilizing established communities.

In Summary:

Upzoning and densifying low-density neighborhoods may help marginally with supply, but without structural reforms and protections, it risks displacing vulnerable communities, enriching developers, and worsening inequality. A comprehensive affordability strategy must blend smart growth with income-based interventions, tenant protections, and equity-focused planning.

Sincerely,

Rafal Olszewski

Upzoning and eliminating low-density communities in New York City are often proposed as solutions to the housing affordability crisis. However, while increasing housing supply is important, this approach alone is not a panacea. Below are several key reasons why upzoning and removing low-density neighborhoods may not effectively address NYC's affordability crisis—and could even exacerbate some issues:

---

1. New Construction ≠ Affordable Housing

- Market-rate housing dominates upzoned areas. Developers often build luxury or high-end market-rate units because they are more profitable, especially in newly upzoned neighborhoods.
- Trickle-down affordability is slow and unreliable. The idea that building more high-end units will eventually reduce prices overall has limited empirical support, especially in strong-demand markets like NYC.

2. Gentrification and Displacement Risks

- Upzoning can accelerate gentrification. Allowing taller buildings in low-density areas can attract luxury development, which increases land values and property taxes, displacing long-term renters and working-class homeowners.
- Existing affordable units may be lost. Redevelopment often demolishes older, rent-stabilized or naturally affordable housing stock.

3. Affordability Crisis Is Also an Income Crisis

- Stagnant wages and rising rents are the core drivers of housing insecurity. Without addressing income inequality and wage stagnation, even increased supply won't make housing truly affordable for many low- and moderate-income New Yorkers.

4. Upzoning Doesn't Guarantee Inclusion

- Mandatory Inclusionary Housing (MIH) requirements are often too weak or allow for too many loopholes. Developers may opt for a limited number of "affordable" units set at 80% AMI (Area Median Income), which is still unaffordable for many working-class families in NYC.

5. Infrastructure Strain

- Public services like schools, transit, sanitation, and green space may not be scaled up at the same rate as population increases, worsening quality of life in newly dense areas.

6. Environmental and Climate Concerns

- Paving over green, low-density spaces can increase urban heat islands, reduce stormwater absorption, and strain ecological resources—especially in outer-borough neighborhoods that act as buffers to environmental stress.

7. Community Resistance and Political Backlash

- Ignoring local voices fuels NIMBYism (Not In My Backyard), political polarization, and lawsuits, all of which can delay or derail housing projects and sour public trust.

8. Speculation and Land Banking

- Upzoning often leads to land speculation. Investors may buy and hold land in anticipation of price increases rather than build, delaying housing production and driving up costs further.

9. Misallocation of Housing Types

- Mismatch between supply and demand. NYC needs more family-sized affordable units, but developers typically build studios and one-bedrooms targeting singles and young professionals.

10. Better Solutions Exist

- Preservation of existing affordable housing, deeper subsidies, expanded NYCHA investment, community land trusts, tenant protections, and income-based vouchers offer more direct paths to affordability.
- Zoning reform should be targeted—focused on underutilized commercial corridors, vacant lots, and transit-rich areas without destabilizing established communities.

In Summary:

Upzoning and densifying low-density neighborhoods may help marginally with supply, but without structural reforms and protections, it risks displacing vulnerable communities, enriching developers, and worsening inequality. A comprehensive affordability strategy must blend smart growth with income-based interventions, tenant protections, and equity-focused planning.

Sincerely,

Czesław Kulesza

Hello,

The notion that altering our primary system to a jungle primary will boost voter turnout lacks empirical support. We must be guided by evidence, not by hopeful theories. A decade of data from California shows that their jungle primary has not increased voter participation in either primary or general elections. This consistent stagnation is a powerful argument against the adoption of this system as a tool for enhancing civic engagement. We need to focus on what genuinely works to bring voters to the polls.

Thank you,

Paola Sanchez

Comments: Testimony Before the New York City Charter Revision Commission Re: Opposition to the Implementation of a "Jungle Primary" System Delivered by Daniel Coates, Make the Road New York Good evening, Commissioners, Thank you for the opportunity to testify today. My name is Daniel Coates and I write on behalf of 28,000 members at Make the Road New York. I am here to express my strong opposition to the proposed adoption of a so-called "jungle primary" system for New York City elections. Under a jungle primary—or top-two system—all candidates, regardless of party affiliation, compete in a single primary election, and the top two vote-getters advance to the general election. While this might sound neutral or even appealing at first glance, the reality is that this system threatens to diminish the voices of communities of color, particularly Black voters, and undermines our city's democratic values. First, jungle primaries dilute the power of organized political communities. In New York City, Black voters have built political power over decades through deep organizing within the Democratic Party. Our current closed primary system allows communities with shared values and interests to select candidates who reflect their priorities. A jungle primary, by contrast, allows a fragmented and crowded field to split the vote, potentially locking out the very communities that have fought so hard to win representation. We've seen this happen in other places. In California and Washington, where top-two primaries have been implemented, communities of color have often found themselves with no candidate of choice on the general election ballot. When multiple candidates from one community run, they can split the vote and be eliminated—even if their community constitutes a majority of voters in that district. Second, jungle primaries suppress participation, particularly among working-class and low-income voters. Research shows that turnout in nonpartisan primaries tends to be lower, especially among voters who are not engaged in high-information elections or who rely on party affiliation as a key tool for understanding candidate platforms. This creates barriers to participation that disproportionately impact Black, brown, immigrant, and young voters—those who already face structural challenges to voting and representation. Third, it's a solution in search of a problem. New York City already made a major change to its electoral system when it adopted ranked-choice voting (RCV), which was approved by a wide margin in a citywide referendum. RCV allows voters to express more nuanced preferences and promotes more inclusive campaigning. Instead of undermining that reform, we should give it time to work and expand civic education around it—especially in underrepresented communities. Implementing a jungle primary would roll back progress. It would concentrate political power in the hands of wealthy candidates who can self-finance, reduce ideological diversity, and silence grassroots voices that have historically used party primaries to organize for change. I urge this Commission to reject any proposals to move New York City to a jungle primary system. Let's protect and strengthen the hard-earned gains toward political inclusion, not erase them. Sincerely, Daniel Coates

Commissioners,

The strength of a political party lies not just in its name but in its ability to communicate its values and stances to the electorate. When a candidate's name is accompanied by a party label like (D), (R), (C), or (WFP), it's more than just an abbreviation; it's a powerful signal. Voters can make well-informed assumptions about that candidate's positions on complex issues like education reform or foreign policy. This efficiency is paramount in a busy world. This explicit signaling, however, is only truly effective if the party's members have a meaningful role in selecting the candidates who carry their standard. If the membership is disenfranchised in this process, the party label loses its integrity and ability to guide voters effectively. As a union leader among PSC-CUNY, this does not reflect the wishes of my members and requires far more discussion and an open session to communicate and take testimony. Taking place under a mayoral administration that has been less than transparent, I do not believe this is the time for such a charter revision, nor should it be completed this year or next. There needs to be far more time to build up voter confidence. Especially as Rank Choice Voting took years to decide, vote on, and implement. This is nowhere near the same and needs to be considered by other trusted servants and community partners, not the mayor.

Best,

Arturo Enamorado III

Commissioners,

I'm here to challenge the narrative that jungle primaries are a tool for increasing voter turnout. The data from states that have adopted them unequivocally proves otherwise. If our objective is truly to enhance democratic participation, we must abandon strategies that have been empirically shown to fail and instead pursue those that yield tangible results. The recent experience in Alaska, which implemented open primaries in 2022, serves as a stark reminder. The 2024 primary election saw alarmingly low turnout, marking it as one of the lowest in half a century. This robust data decisively points to the conclusion that these elections have had little to no impact on encouraging more people to vote. We need to focus on effective voter outreach and engagement, not on structural reforms that consistently fall short.

Thanks,

Jonathon Schaff

Hello Commissioners,

To increase voter turnout, we must fortify its structure. The evidence is that open primaries do not work. The proven solution is to adopt even-year primaries. Beyond that structural fix, the most important factor is the mobilization work of organized groups. Political parties, unions, and community organizations use direct contact to great effect. Proposals to diminish their capacity or self-determination are counterproductive and seem designed to reduce organized influence. Real turnout growth comes from empowering, not hamstringing, these essential groups.

Attention Commissioners,

I am writing to express my opposition to the proposed jungle primary system. The current system of party primaries is not perfect but it provides meaningful opportunities for organized groups of citizens to collectively influence the selection of candidates for the general election. ATTN Commissioners:

The strength of political parties lies in their capacity to mobilize and activate voters. But this mobilization isn't automatic; it hinges on the party's internal democratic processes. When party members are genuinely activated because they selected their candidate, the party becomes a powerful force for increasing turnout. This is a fundamental principle: people are more invested when they have a stake. Conversely, if primary systems dilute the power of party members to choose their nominees, it weakens the party's ability to excite its base. The result is often a dispirited electorate, less likely to participate, and a missed opportunity for the party to fulfill its vital role in fostering democratic engagement.

Let's put an end to the discussion about jungle primaries. It's a system that voters have clearly indicated they do not want. The evidence from last year's elections in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota is unambiguous: the proposal was defeated in every state. This widespread rejection is a testament to the value that voters place on the traditional role of political parties. I urge this commission to abandon this unpopular initiative and instead dedicate its efforts to promoting proven and effective reforms like even-year election cycles.

The conversation about jungle primaries is being driven by those who wish to see labor's influence eradicated. By removing the party nomination process, they open the floodgates for billionaire-backed candidates to seize power and govern on behalf of the rich. To Whom It May Concern,

As a concerned citizen, I am asking this commission to halt any and all efforts related to jungle primaries. This is a solution in search of a problem, and one that voters have repeatedly rejected. The failure of such initiatives in six states last year, including Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota, is a testament to its lack of public support. People value the role of political parties in shaping electoral choices. It would be a profound misuse of public trust and resources to continue pushing this idea. Let's focus on what works, such as even-year elections.

New York City Democratic Socialists of America

Testimony in Opposition to Top-Two Open Primaries Proposal 2025 Charter Revision Commission

Good evening Members of the Commission,

My name is Angelo Pis-Dudot. I'm a Brooklyn resident, lawyer, and local government policy analyst. I am a member of the New York City chapter of the Democratic Socialists of America (NYC-DSA) and co-lead its Democratize New York Working Group, which organizes to advance reforms to fully realize political democracy in New York. I speak on behalf of the chapter. NYC-DSA opposes the Commission's open primaries proposal and urges the Commission to table it.

NYC-DSA is a democratically-run organization of over 10,000 New Yorkers. Our chapter powered the recent victory of Zohran Mamdani in the Democratic Party primary for mayor—a campaign that inspired historic new party registrations and turnout from under-engaged constituencies.<sup>1</sup>

As democratic socialists, we are committed to advancing democracy in all aspects of our society. Because of that commitment, we share the Commission's concerns about weak voter empowerment, low turnout, and the unrepresentativeness of the electorate. These are symptoms of a sick democracy in New York. But the Commission's open primaries proposal will not cure these symptoms. In fact, it may make some of them worse.

I. Top-two Open Primaries Weaken Our Democracy and Fail to Give Voters Meaningfully Different Choices.

First, open primaries do not build a stronger democracy or lead to more voter choice and power. Strong democracy requires healthy political parties in competitive elections that guarantee minority representation and majority control.<sup>2</sup>

But open primaries would further weaken political parties, which are historically weak in the United States.<sup>3</sup> By allowing everyone to vote for anyone under a party label, that party label becomes less meaningful and elections become an unorganized free-for-all. While mitigative measures like having candidates' party registrations appear next to their name would somewhat help voters sort through this mess, that does not change the fact that voters totally unaffiliated with a party—or who are members of an opposing party—would then be able to determine that party's candidate, rendering the party registration label meaningless.

In addition, top-two open primaries in a city like New York will also make general elections uncompetitive and fail to give voters more choice. Under the Commission's proposal, where the top-two candidates from a ranked-choice open primary advance to the general, most general elections—especially city-wide ones—will end up featuring two Democrats, thereby locking out independent candidates, Republicans, and other political minorities from the general election ballot. That is exactly what has happened under California's top-two system, which has drawn a lawsuit from minor parties and independent candidates alleging violations of their First Amendment right to freedom of association.<sup>4</sup> A bunch of Democrat versus Democrat elections will not give voters more choice during the general election, which is the contest that determines who enters office and is when most voters vote.

1.1 million voters in New York City have chosen to not affiliate with a party. Indeed, a majority of voters are hungry for new parties.<sup>5</sup> Voters are hungry for new options, not more of the same. But the Commission's proposal ignores this reality.

The Commission's failure to acknowledge these serious problems and analyze other options in its reports is highly concerning. Although the Commission cursorily mentions some alternatives like Alaska's top-four open primary in its reports, the Commission totally ignores other worthwhile and established options. For example, the Commission fails to discuss proportional representation, which currently exists in various cities in the U.S. and around the world. In fact, New York City previously had proportional representation, which was responsible for a thriving multi-party system in the City Council that reflected our City's political diversity.<sup>6</sup>

By failing to outline the basic pros and cons of different valid electoral models from around the country and failing to explain why its top-two proposal is the best among them, the Commission undermines the appearance of its impartiality. New Yorkers deserve better if the Commission is proposing to overhaul our election system.

II. Open Primaries Fail to Achieve the Commission's Other Two Goals: Increased Turnout and Representativeness.

Second, open primaries will not increase turnout and representativeness. The Commission's review suggests that moving to open primaries may increase turnout by around 5 percentage points at best. Such a small change is more likely due to the elimination of barriers to vote, like party registration deadlines, and not because unaffiliated voters are excited to vote for candidates from parties with which they don't identify. In fact, studies of primary reform have found that switches to open and top-two systems simply do not change the primary electorate.<sup>7</sup> As the Commission admits, if turnout does not meaningfully increase because of open primaries, then neither will representativeness of the electorate. As a result, the Commission will fail to achieve its turnout and representativeness goals.

There are other reforms that will reliably increase turnout and representativeness, like switching to same-day party registration and the Commission's even-year elections proposal. Even better, Zohran Mamdani's victory in the Democratic primary for mayor demonstrated that turnout and representativeness will explode when voters are excited about a candidate who runs a people-powered campaign that listens to and proposes bold solutions to the concerns of regular working New Yorkers..

Instead of pursuing a new electoral system that would not deliver the benefits the Commission seeks, the Commission should focus on ones that would, like making registration easier and even-year elections. The Commission's insistence on top-two open primaries despite that system's inability to achieve the Commission's goals is confusing and raises questions about the Commission's motivations.

III. The Commission's Proposal Is a Waste of Taxpayer Dollars and Would Come Too Soon After Ranked-Choice Voting's Implementation.

Finally, the Commission's proposal is bad election design that would waste millions of taxpayer dollars. When all eligible voters have already voted in a ranked-choice election featuring all eligible candidates, why run another costly election featuring the candidate who already won and the runner-up? It's redundant and a waste of taxpayer dollars.

In addition, New Yorkers have just begun getting the hang of ranked-choice voting and we need further time to study its effects on our elections before pursuing further reforms.

The Commission's flawed proposal should not be rushed to the ballot. NYC-DSA urges the Commission to table it.

Do more open primaries bring in more moderate voters? The answer to these questions appears to be simple: No.").

Comments: I am writing to argue AGAINST Open Primaries for Municipal Elections as proposed by the Charter Revision Commission. My first argument against the proposition is that this was only very recently proposed and we have not been given sufficient time to adequately research the impact and implementation of open primaries. Second, Working Families Party NY has pointed out that such a change potentially violates the NY State constitution system of 'fusion voting' which allows for the same name to appear multiple times on a ballot if the candidate is affiliated with multiple parties (I.e. Democratic Party and Working Families Party). The issue is the proposition does not lay out how and if it would incorporate this part of the constitution and again, this is an example of there not being sufficient time to consider the full impact of such a revision. Lastly, much of the argument in favor of this revision rests upon the idea that open primaries will increase the youth voter turnout. I would like to point out that what increases the youth voter turnout, really any demographic to turnout, is when candidates have the courage and ability to speak to the concerns and values of young people and all groups of people. Namely, 'Do I have a future in this city that I, my family, and my neighbors can afford?' We saw exactly this swell in the closed democratic primary for mayor with Zohran Mamdani speaking to this very question and it resulted in historically high turnout and it was young people that represented his largest voting block by age. Not because the primary was open, but because the campaign spoke to the lived experience of the electorate and in doing so, inspired people to register to vote, affiliate with the Democratic party, and turnout on election day. Compare this to the abysmal turnout in 2021 when our current disgrace of a Mayor, Eric Adams, was elected. If the city is really concerned with increasing voter turnout, end corporate money in politics so politicians are only beholden to the people of this city and actually speak to and deliver on the needs of the people. That will inspire people to vote.

[EXTERNAL] The Case Against Jungle Primaries

Commissioners,

I am concerned that the push for jungle primaries is based on a fundamental misunderstanding of their impact on voter turnout. The evidence is clear: these systems do not work as advertised. Consider the recent situation in Alaska, which moved to an open primary system in 2022. Their 2024 primary election had a turnout rate that was among the lowest in the last half-century. This stark example should serve as a cautionary tale, demonstrating that these electoral reforms do not inherently lead to higher levels of voter participation. We must look elsewhere for effective solutions.

Dear Commissioners:

New Yorkers are still adjusting to Ranked-Choice Voting, approved in 2019. To suggest another wholesale change like "Jungle Primaries" feels chaotic.

We need consistency. We need a period where voters become comfortable with the current system and become regular voters. Adding more complexity and new processes right now is not a solution to low turnout; it's a guaranteed way to make it worse by frustrating and confusing the electorate.

yours sincerely,

Commissioners,

Jungle primary reforms are a waste of time and money because voters don't want them. They are unpopular and consistently rejected. Look at last year's results: failed in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota. This isn't a partisan issue; it's about voters of all ideologies understanding the importance of political parties. This commission should not waste public resources on an unpopular proposition. If you want to increase turnout, stick with even-year elections.

Comments: Please, please DO NOT IMPLEMENT THAT CLOWN ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSED CHANGES! RCV is working well, and a "jungle primary" would undo the progress we've made by depressing turnout among minorities and young voters. IT'S NOT A COINCIDENCE THAT ERIC ADAMS IS TRYING TO TAMPER WITH ELECTIONS shortly after making A DISGRACEFUL DEAL WITH DONALD TRUMP! Please don't fall for it! Adams a patently corrupt servant of the rich, and New Yorkers should not have to worry about him messing with our electoral system. PLEASE REJECT JUNGLE PRIMARIES AND KEEP RCV! It's so obvious that Eric Adams is doing this as a way of sneakily getting back at the progressives who are about to take his job away from him — be smarter than that, and stand up for New Yorkers. Thank you, Stephen

Charter Revision Commission,

On behalf of over 17,000 in-service and retired school leaders of New York City's public schools, thank you for the opportunity to share this testimony. We are proud to speak out on behalf of our members, the students they serve, and the communities they support. As the union of leaders, we understand the power of voice, participation, and the structures that make democracy work.

We are here today to express deep concerns about the proposal to eliminate party primaries in New York City. While this proposal is being described as reform, in practice it risks weakening the ability of working people to organize and act together. It threatens to reduce the influence of communities who rely on shared values, long-standing relationships, and collective action to support candidates who understand their daily realities.

Party primaries are not perfect, but they are one of the few remaining tools that allow unions like ours to engage members in the political process. They help build grassroots leadership, encourage participation, and shape the direction of public policy. These primaries allow working-class communities to unite behind candidates who reflect their lived experience. Removing them introduces confusion and makes it easier for high-dollar special interests to dominate, drowning out local voices and weakening public trust.

In New York City, where the Democratic primary effectively determines the outcome in many districts, eliminating party primaries would reduce meaningful choice for voters rather than expand it. We have seen in other cities and states that open or nonpartisan primaries do not increase voter engagement. Voter confusion increases, and candidates with the most resources tend to prevail.

As public-school leaders, we believe in systems that are transparent, inclusive, and focused on outcomes that benefit the public. Democracy works when communities have clear, accessible ways to organize and be heard. That includes Labor. That includes the millions of New Yorkers who see their union not only as a force in the workplace, but as a vital voice in civic life.

We urge the Commission to reconsider this proposal. Protect the mechanisms that allow working people to build power and lead. Uphold the right of communities to speak collectively and elect representatives who understand their needs.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Henry D. Rubio

Dear Commissioners,

The ongoing discussion about jungle primaries is deeply concerning because voters have made their opposition unequivocally clear. These reforms consistently fail to achieve their stated goals and are routinely rejected at the ballot box. Last year, this was on the ballot in six states – Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota – and it failed in all six. This demonstrates that voters, regardless of their political affiliation, understand the value of political parties in candidate selection. This commission should not waste valuable resources on an unpopular and ultimately futile proposition. If the goal is truly to increase voter turnout, focus on what genuinely works: even-year elections.

Sincerely,
Kip Carter

Dear Commissioners,

Open primaries would harm NYers. The Republican Party is actively trying to dismantle our democracy — giving up partisan elections and giving Republicans a say in which Democrats get to run in the general could open the door to policies that would be terrible for our city. It would also scramble the voting process that voters have just learned to use successfully, as seen in the record turnout in this year's mayoral primary. Sometime in the future when we have a functional, responsible opposition party, maybe open primaries will make sense, but now is not the time to give Republicans more say in our local government.

The even-year election proposal is great, would boost participation in city elections, but open primaries would do more harm than good.

Sincerely,

Tony Melone

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing to express strong support for all proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, to help New York City address the current housing shortage and ensure elections are more representative. Proposal 1 and Proposal 2 are sensible. Prioritizing affordable housing will lead to more housing construction and a faster review process will give a greater incentive to build smaller apartments that are currently difficult to build when subject to ULURP. Proposal 3 will ensure that development benefits the city as a whole, rather than being subject to City Council member deference. Proposal 4 would be a wonderful move towards modernizing the land use processes of NYC. Proposal 5 would lead to greater voter turnout, making elections more representative. Potential proposal 6 is a fantastic idea, allowing all voters to participate regardless of party affiliation will encourage candidates to appeal to a broader electorate. I recommend giving all New Yorkers a voice in choosing their representatives. Thanks for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. hope all six measures make it to the November ballot so that New York can decide on these important reforms. Commissioners,

Building a more engaged electorate requires us to be strategic. The data shows that jungle primaries are not a successful tool for boosting turnout. A far more reliable path is to adopt even-year primaries. Furthermore, we cannot ignore the immense contribution of community, labor, and political organizations. They are the experts in the high-impact, personal outreach that consistently increases voter participation. Efforts to diminish the strength or autonomy of these groups would be profoundly damaging to our democratic health. True progress lies in strengthening, not weakening, these crucial institutions.

Thanks,

Sharon Cromwell

Comments: Testimony with data attached. Text also pasted below. Four out of Five Support Open Primaries in NYC Testimony to the NYC Charter Revision Commission Tim Hoefer Member, Board of Directors & Interim Executive Director Unite NY This testimony will focus on the overwhelming support for open primaries among all NYC voters. Most significantly, the most recent in our organization's Voter Empowerment Index, a quarterly poll, found that 80 percent of New Yorker City residents favor an open primary system that allows all voters to participate in the primary process. On behalf of Unite NY, I provide this data so that it might help the Commission decide whether or not to place a question on the ballot to establish open primaries in New York City, allowing every registered voter to participate fully in the democratic process. The Commission has received a lot of testimony from those in favor of this proposal, including from Unite NY staff and some of the more than 15,000 supporters in our network. The data submitted below shows that support is more broad than just those the Commission has already heard from. ## Four out of Five Support Open Primaries in NYC

Testimony to the NYC Charter Revision Commission

Tim Hoefer

Member, Board of Directors & Interim Executive Director
Unite NY

This testimony will focus on the overwhelming support for open primaries among all NYC voters. Most significantly, the most recent in our organization's Voter Empowerment Index,<sup>1</sup> a quarterly poll, found that 80 percent of New Yorker City residents favor an open primary system that allows all voters to participate in the primary process.

On behalf of Unite NY, I provide this data so that it might help the Commission decide whether or not to place a question on the ballot to establish open primaries in New York City, allowing every registered voter to participate fully in the democratic process.

The Commission has received a lot of testimony from those in favor of this proposal, including from Unite NY staff and some of the more than 15,000 supporters in our network. The data submitted below shows that support is more broad than just those the Commission has already heard from.

This wide public support spans party affiliations, race, generation, gender, boroughs, and other demographics (see attached).

More than 1 million independent voters are effectively disenfranchised from taxpayer-funded primaries because they choose not to enroll in one of the two major parties. This discrepancy undermines fairness and dilutes the democratic principle of equal representation.

Under closed primaries, very often less than ten percent of registered voters decide the outcome of elections. This favors party insiders and special interests while discouraging broader civic engagement. Closed primaries also incentivize candidates to speak to the loudest constituency among factions of a party, rather than the entire constituency.

It's clear from the data, the people of New York City want open primaries.

[EXTERNAL] Jungle Primaries Will Undermine Our New RCV System

Commissioners,

If we truly want to serve voters, we must prioritize their experience. Introducing "Jungle Primaries" right after RCV shows a disregard for the challenges voters face in adapting to new systems. The most helpful reforms are often the simplest. Consolidating elections to even years is a clear, understandable change that would likely boost turnout. In contrast, this proposal adds a layer of inscrutable complexity. It also disadvantages and dilutes the power of people-driven campaigns and third parties. Let's pursue practical solutions that empower voters, rather than abstract ideas that are certain to confuse them and suppress their participation.

Thanks,

Avi Glickstein

[EXTERNAL] No to Open Primaries

Dear Commissioners:

I write to express my opposition to the proposal for "open primaries." My opposition is based in many reasons, but for the sake of concision I would like to highlight three in particular:

Making primaries "open" would functionally nullify the State of New York's purpose of recognizing political parties. Legally recognized political parties are not only culturally important constructs; they are legal structures that provide essential mechanisms by which working people without wealth can successfully organize masses of other fellow working people at a scale large enough to compete with the power of concentrated capital that lies in the hands of the wealthy few.

Open primaries have not been shown to reliably increase voter turnout. Moreover, even in those specific jurisdictions for which evidence of higher turnout exists, such increased turnout tends to come at the cost of also reducing the political diversity of the candidates who appear on the general-election ballot.

Open primaries tend to augment the already disproportionate political influence of concentrated wealth – which, in elections for NYC offices, usually takes the form of large independent expenditures funded by billionaires and big corporations. In so doing, open primaries further diminish the relative power of the donations made, and the organizing & mobilizing activities conducted, by most voters. In short, open primaries weaken the impact of voters' own efforts to elect candidates aligned with their respective views.

For these reasons alone, the proposal to open NYC's primaries should be removed from the commission's final set of ballot proposals.

Instead of proposing open primaries, the Commission should propose ranked-choice voting in general elections; such a change would substantially address most of the Commission's concerns as stated in its July 01 report.

Thank you,
Bryan Maygers

Dear City Charter Commissioners,

My name is Joanne Grell, and I proudly serve on Bronx Community Board 10, where I have dedicated my time to representing and protecting the interests of my community for the past three (3) years. I submit this testimony to express my strong and unequivocal opposition to the proposed changes to the New York City Charter that would diminish Community Boards' role in the Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP).

Community Board members are volunteers. We are not paid lobbyists or political insiders. We are the residents, parents, workers, and caretakers who step up to serve on our local Board because we care deeply about our neighbors and we know first-hand what their concerns are. We join our Boards to protect our neighborhoods, and advocate for our communities to ensure their voices are included and heard in the city's planning and development processes.

Let me be clear, these proposals are not just technical adjustments, but they dismantle the transparency and civic engagement that are the foundation of equitable land use planning. Essentially, these proposals silence the voices of our communities which significantly undermines public trust.

The proposal to slash the ULURP review period from 60 to 30 days is not just misguided, it is quite dangerous. In 2019, the Charter Revision Commission rightly recognized the need for more time, not less. That additional 30 days has been critical for our Board, especially with the recent Bally's proposal and the City of Yes housing proposal. It allows us to thoroughly review complex documents like the City Environmental Quality Review (CEQR), hold meaningful public meetings, engage in outreach, and make informed, thoughtful recommendations. Cutting this time in half would cripple our ability to do what is best for the community and silence the very voices ULURP was designed to uplift.

The report's proposals to expedite zoning changes, enforce rigid thresholds, and leverage affordable housing as a justification to sidestep community input raise serious concerns. These changes would strip communities of their right to understand and respond to developments that will permanently alter their environment and those of their families. Community Boards are not barriers to progress, but the frontline defenders of equity, accountability, and the lived experience and wisdom of our neighborhoods. If the aim is more housing, then confront the inefficiencies where they actually exist, after ULURP. Stripping away the last layer of public oversight is not reform, it's regression.

Moreover, the attempt to undermine the City Council's practice of member deference is equally concerning. Council Members are elected by the people to represent their districts, and their ability to advocate for their communities in land use matters is absolutely essential. Community Boards, like the Council, are independent municipal bodies. Undermining either weakens the democratic fabric of our city.

Let me be absolutely clear: reducing the ULURP review period is a step backward. It will not solve the housing crisis, nor will it speed up development in a meaningful or equitable way. What it will do is silence communities, weaken oversight, and erode the little trust that remains of the city's planning process.

I urge this Commission to reject these proposals and to stand with the communities you pledged to serve. Do not take away the time we need to protect our neighborhoods.

Thank you for your attention.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. As a Brooklyn resident, I'm writing to express strong support for Proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, to make New York City more affordable and democratically representative. I support Proposals 1-4 to fast track affordable housing, simplify review, strike a better balance in the land use process, and digitize the City Map. The city's housing shortage demands bold action. Proposal 1 would make it easier and faster to produce affordable housing, lowering costs and ensuring that all neighborhoods contribute to solving this crisis. This reform is long overdue and essential to reversing the tide of displacement. Proposal 2 would streamline the approval process for smaller rezonings that add housing, protect against flooding, and create open space. These are exactly the kinds of projects that should not be delayed by red tape, and this proposal would allow the city to respond more nimbly to urgent infrastructure and climate needs. The current system of member deference gives individual councilmembers outsized power to block citywide priorities. Proposal 3's new Appeals Board would ensure that development decisions reflect borough-wide and citywide considerations- not just the narrowest political interests. A unified City Map is a step in the right direction, since the current system can impose significant costs and time on infrastructure, housing, and other projects. Proposal 4's Digital City Map would allow processes that today take months or even years to occur nearly instantly. I also support considering Open New York's recommendations for a fairer and more affordable NYC, many of which are already very well-aligned with the commission's proposals. I encourage the commission to dedicate additional time to exploring Open New York's proposal to bring the housing shortage into landmarks decisions. Proposal 5 is a no-brainer: moving local elections to even years would save the city money and dramatically increase turnout, especially among younger voters, working-class communities, and voters of color. This reform would help ensure that the voices shaping local government reflect the full diversity of our city. I strongly encourage the Commission to move forward with Proposal 6. Open primaries would enfranchise the 1 million+ New Yorkers who are currently locked out of primary elections due to party registration rules. These voters deserve a voice in the elections that matter most in our one-party-dominated city. Open primaries would boost turnout in local elections, increase electoral competition, and encourage candidates to appeal to a broader cross-section of voters. I urge the Commission to put all six measures on the November ballot so that voters can weigh in. Sincerely, Sarah Cocuzzo Bedford-Stuyvesant 11206

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the charter revision process. As someone who grew up in this city and is quite intent on remaining here, I value the ability to participate in the policy debates of our great city. I am writing to express my strong support for all proposals which simplify and speed up the process of home building and development. I believe that proposals 1-4 are important steps we must take towards an affordable and welcoming city. New Yorkers are suffering from an acute housing shortage, approximately 1 million units as of 2025. We are in a desperate need of more housing of every type and in every neighborhood. The median home price is hovering around $1,000,000 and the median rent is creeping ever closer to $5,000. New Yorkers are being priced out, businesses are struggling to recruit and retain workers, and young people are seeing their hopes of starting a family crushed under the weight of their rent payments. Despite this crisis (which no one denies) and the clear eagerness of home builders to remedy it, new development is moving at a glacial pace. Time and time again we see projects delayed, scaled back, or cancelled all together due to a small but vocal group of entrenched interests. People who have already achieved their

American Dream are denying others the same opportunity in the name of “neighborhood character”. Below are some common criticisms that I have heard of these proposals. “The proposals would eliminate common sense regulation and oversight of development.” There is nothing “common sense” about the current planning regime, as seen by its results. No set of common-sense regulations would end in a city that is out of reach for the people building it. If the rules we followed brought us here, of what use were the rules? “Looser planning will change the feel of my neighborhood.” The character of a place is created by the people who live there, not the buildings. If planning is too strict and homes too scarce, the character of every neighborhood will soon be the same: a playground for the rich and childless. “New development is never affordable.” It is certainly true that new homes tend to be more expensive than used homes, that does not change the impact of new construction on the housing market as a whole. Nearly all economists and development studies agree, more supply = more housing at different price points in the long run. Furthermore, if the cost of new construction is at issue, it is worth analyzing the cost of the planning and approval process. Time is money, and for developers the time they spend sitting on an empty lot, paying interest and property tax while waiting for final approval, amounts to a massive expense. It should not be a surprise that this expense is reflected in the cost of the finished product. “New York is too crowded, more homes will cause more crowding.” This is possibly the strangest criticism I routinely hear. It essentially amounts to “the city would be great, if it wasn’t for all the people.” The fact that NYC is the largest, densest city in America is precisely the reason it is also the richest. Our large population is what makes our job market so buoyant, our universities world class, our society vibrant and our cultural scene dominant. New neighbors are not just competition for a space, they are also customers and employees for local business, founders and members of social clubs, volunteers for the community, taxpayers to the treasury, and of course, potential friends. I believe that the housing shortage is by far our city’s largest challenge. I believe that new neighbors are an asset, not a liability. I believe that change is something to be accommodated and embraced, not futilely resisted. For these reasons and more, I hope that you find my testimony persuasive and put every pro-housing proposal on the ballot. Thank you for your time and consideration. Orest Voloshchuk Glendale, Queens

Dear Commission:

I had registered to testify by ZOOM at the public hearing at the Schomburg Center on July 7 from 5 pm to 8pm, and was dismayed when Chair Richard Buery indicated that those who had signed up would not be able to testify. Please accept this written testimony.

I serve as Chair for Community Board One Queens, I am writing to express concerns regarding the proposal to modify the NYC Charter.

It's discouraging to see the Commission and our Mayor attempt to wrestle community input away from the very people who understand their communities needs, and these proposed changes to limit council member deference and community board review will take away the little leverage we have to improve projects, as we've done in CB1.

In CB1 Queens since 2018, we've seen nearly rezoning 30 applications for housing be approved by the City Council. There are a handful - three that I recall - that we as a community board voted down, due to the lack of truly affordable housing as well as negative impact on the neighborhood according to draft environmental impact statements. In many cases, including Innovation QNS, community board demands led both the Borough President and City Council member to negotiate an increased number of affordable housing units, community benefits, and an overall improved development. That was an enormous project, but even with some of the smaller scale ones, we've been able to advocate for family sized units, and deeper affordability through lower AMI levels to better reflect our community's demographics and provide access for those being priced out.

Despite approval of all of these nearly 30 residential rezonings, I can count on one hand the number that have actually been completed. In fact, we have some rezonings going back to 2012 and 2013 that still have not delivered on the housing they promised. So when we talk about the housing crisis, and hear build, build, build, as a solution, it's so disingenuous to place the blame on the City Council, ULURP, or community boards. These rezoned properties in CB1 are sitting vacant or are waiting to be flipped; we are talking thousands and thousands of units, including income restricted ones, that should be on the market now. A recommendation would be to have the City Charter mandate a reasonable timeline for development after a rezoning and not leave it indefinitely open. There should be some type of consequence if they can't deliver on what they promised in exchange for a rezoning that has greatly increased their land value.

Also, simultaneous community board and Borough President review being proposed would seriously undermine the feedback process between the Borough President and community boards. These two review processes should be kept as is, to ensure meaningful engagement and input from those on the ground, one following the other.

Moreover, as volunteers, community boards should be given more time to review large scale developments and/or large neighborhood rezonings. Sixty days from certification is inadequate for rezonings that span large swaths of our community, especially since the Department of City Planning has put an increasingly tight hold on releasing information needed to review projects until certification. There should be more emphasis on pre-certification presentations to Community Boards and feedback before pre-filing meetings begin with DCP.

The durability of our democratic institutions rests upon active and meaningful civic participation, and there must be checks and balances in land use decisions. ULURP was created to empower local democracy and the voices of the people. Via a representative in the City Council who is duly elected, every New Yorker is provided with a vote on land use matters. We need checks on executive control especially given the influence of big real estate and lobbyists.

Pushing these and other changes in such a rushed manner, during an election year and at a time when the public isn't paying attention only feeds the cynicism and distrust the public has of the government, and this administration.

Thank you.

Evie Hantzopoulos

Comments: While I support an investigation into the pros/cons of open primaries and election reforms in general, I don't think a charter revision is the appropriate venue. It's a complicated concept and especially coming on the heels of another major elections change - RCV - it risks really confusing voters. Also, the way "open primaries" is defined here is extra confusing in the context of RCV. Why would we need a separate "primary" at all? With no parties in a primary with RCV, we'd have a second election for no reason. Why not just abolish the primary and apply RCV to the general? That seems like a better solution. This proposal should be subject to debate and refinement by our elected reps in the council rather than being proposed on a solely Y/N basis since it's problematic as-is.

Comments: The New York City Charter Revision Commission released its final report outlining proposed changes to our current land use process. While the 115-page report includes a wide range of ideas, the most consequential proposals would have a disastrous impact on how we plan and grow as a city. These proposals would significantly curtail public input and undercut the ability of City Council Members and Community Boards to represent their constituents and their best interests. The Uniform Land Use Review Procedure, more commonly referred to as "ULURP," is a cornerstone of how we shape our city. It empowers communities to weigh in on land use decisions that shape their neighborhoods – decisions that affect housing, infrastructure, and quality of life. The process gives a voice to Community Boards, Borough Presidents, and us – your local Council Members who know the district and its residents best. Currently, most new major developments go through the ULURP process, and ultimately fall before the New York City Council, which has the final say. One of the most troubling parts of this proposal is the creation of a new "appeals board" that would have the power to overturn the Council's decision. This appeals board would consist of just three individuals – the Mayor, the City Council Speaker, and the Borough President. In practice, two out of the three may not even reside in the borough where the project is proposed. And even if the local community and their Council Member are united in opposition, this small board could override their vote and allow the project to move forward anyway. That has some very serious implications for our communities and the role they will play in the decision-making process. Equally as concerning is the Charter Revision Commission's proposal to remove certain types of rezonings from the full ULURP process - all the while giving the community boards less time to review these projects. More specifically, the Commission suggests exempting projects that add up to four stories in height (up to 45 feet) or increase residential density by as much as 30 percent in mid- and high-density zones (R6 - R12). In low-rise or moderately-scaled neighborhoods - like many of those in my district, Northern Queens and Eastern Queens upzone quiet blocks and threaten the character of these neighborhoods. And it is not an exaggeration to say this would be the death of single-family areas. Left unchecked, quiet, single-family neighborhoods could be rapidly transformed into blocks of four-story apartment buildings - with little warning, and no meaningful dialogue with the community. Similarly, the Commission's report also opens the door for affordable housing projects, few of which are even actually affordable, to proceed through the Board of Standards and Appeals and bypass the public ULURP process altogether - no Community Board review, no Council vote, and no opportunity for public testimony. The public deserves more involvement in land use decisions - not less. I can acknowledge that the ULURP process isn't perfect. It is lengthy, complex and can feel bureaucratic. I do believe the Council should be working to improve ULURP with our communities. But these proposals are not about efficiency. It's about removing the checks and balances that protect neighborhoods from overdevelopment and environmental harm. The Charter Revision Commission is expected to vote on these proposals later this month. If approved, they will appear on the back of your ballot on Election Day this November. I urge the Commission to reject them outright. Our communities deserve a seat at the table.

Comments: To whom it may concern. I am writing about the way the City enters into revocable consent agreements with vendors and businesses to use public space. This may not seem like a priority, but over the past year, thousands of restaurants have applied for revocable consent agreements with the City to participate in the Dining Out NYC program run through the Department of Transportation. Each applicant applying for a roadway dining program is required to promote their public hearing in multiple newspapers, sometimes costing these small businesses over $1000 dollars. Promoting proposed revocable consent agreements in newspapers is mandated by the City Charter. This is an expensive and outdated method of raising public awareness, and a major obstacle for businesses wishing to participate in public space programs. The printing and publishing process is complicated for City workers and small businesses to navigate. I urge the commission to revise section 371 of the City Charter to modernize how the public is informed, reducing the burden for businesses and increasing awareness for the public. The City should promote public hearings through it's own websites, social media, or online news sources, rather than rely on newspapers with shrinking circulations.

Thank you.

As a New Yorker and advocate for climate resilience, I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects - especially solar systems and battery energy storage.

Climate change is already impacting our city with more extreme heat, flooding, and grid stress. To prepare for a safer, more affordable, and resilient future, New York must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood.

That's why I support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably.

I urge the Commission to ensure that clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized under any fast-track procedures and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review.

Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight.

Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process.

Sincerely,

Emily Turk

ATTN Commissioners:

I implore this commission to listen to the will of the electorate and abandon the concept of jungle primaries. This is a reform that lacks popular support and has a consistent history of being voted down. The fact that it failed in six separate states just last year, including Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota, is a clear indictment of its unpopularity. Voters appreciate the clarity and accountability that party primaries provide. It is time to move on from this divisive and unpopular issue and focus on what works.

Commissioners,

Let's not mince words: jungle primaries are an unpopular and failed reform. This commission should not be wasting its time on them. We have clear data from the electorate. The measure was defeated in New York City by a 70-30 vote. It was defeated last year in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota. The message is consistent and clear. Voters value political parties. It is time to honor that sentiment and focus on proven, effective reforms. Shifting elections to even-numbered years is a strategy with a track record of success.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the charter process. As someone who was born and raised in NYC by immigrant parents and wish to stay here for the rest of my life, I have found it frustratingly hard for young adults and working class New Yorkers to remain in the city. I am waiting to express my strong support for all proposals that simplify and expedite the process of home building & development. I believe that proposals 1-4 are important steps that we must take towards an affordable and livable city. What makes the city great is the richness and diversity of residents present here. By putting forward every pro-housing proposal on the ballot, more people who so strongly wish to live in this amazing city can do so, and bring in all the culture and business that the city is known for. Hello,

My name is Jasmine, and I am a young Democrat born and raised in New York City. I am here to urge against the implementation of jungle primaries in our municipal elections.

The data is unequivocal: removing traditional party primaries decreases voter participation. The fact that almost half of all voters whose party doesn't have a candidate in a jungle-primary election choose to sit out should alarm anyone concerned about democratic health. This is a direct consequence of systems that make it difficult for voters to identify a candidate truly representative of their party's values. A jungle primary, while seemingly broadening the field, can actually eliminate choice for voters by forcing them to navigate a ballot without clear ideological guideposts, making it harder to find a viable candidate who resonates with their core beliefs. Robust, member-driven parties are crucial for sustained engagement. Jungle primaries are not that.

Thank you,

Jasmine Wynn

Comments: I support open (non-partisan) primaries to replace ranked choice voting in New York City. Ranked choice voting was a well-intended approach to encouraging candidates to appeal to a broad range of voters, rather than partisan extremes. In practice, it seems quite undemocratic as I've experienced it. Figuring out who to rank seems to involve computer simulations based on polls. A large proportion of voters will not understand or access such recommendations. It also encourages cross-endorsements that suggest a quid-pro-quo (e.g. jobs in a new administration). Proof of the undemocratic nature of ranked choice is found in the low turnout in the recent mayoral primary and the public discourse and debate about who to rank based on simulations. Open primaries would achieve the goal of favoring candidates with broad appeal while being much easier for the broadest range of voters to understand, encouraging participation. Open primaries will also reduce partisanship and the hard and soft corruption that seems to arise inevitably when a city is too long dominated by a single party.

Comments: NYC Charter Revision Commission, I am writing to oppose ballot questions 1 through 3. These proposals will give power to unelected bureaucrats and developers . It takes away the rights of residents to have input in their own communities . It is selecting districts for upzoning . It is for development in low density neighborhoods across the city . It is taking away a process we have had . The new Appeals Board would override our representatives and eliminate the voices of our communities. How very undemocratic .Developers and special interests will be the only voices you hear. The changes to the ULURP process would take land away from City Council and give it to those not elected. Each councilmember knows their district . They will no longer have the ability to advocate for the residents of their district . The City of Yes passed , this is just a move to concentrate land use power to a few , rather than residents of NYC having a say in how our city is shaped . Special District and Historic Districts were exempt from the City of Yes and well as some flood zones . These exemptions should continue . City Island Special District should remain as such . City Island has been called a New England Seaport , the Gem of the Bronx . We are known for our seafood restaurants and welcome tens of thousands of visitors, from Spring to Fall , to dine and stroll our beautiful community . It is unique and that is why New Yorkers come to visit . People come to enjoy the quaint , charming and nautical village atmosphere . Why would you destroy that with out of character building , no parking ?Our community businesses generate many tax dollars for NYC . people don't want to come here to look at apartment buildings and no place to park while visiting . . Our residential dead end streets cannot fit more buildings without parking . Are you planning to build an evacuation site here to house people during hurricanes , storms ,flooding and blackouts ? Address climate change ?Address infrastructure ?You can't build , flood us and then backtrack . So please leave our special district zoning in place and the ability for our representatives to actually represent us . Thank You, Kathy Lewis City Island Resident

Asian American Federation

Testimony to the New York City Charter Revision Commission

July 15, 2025

Written Testimony

Thank you to the New York City Charter Revision Commission and the opportunity to testify. I am Lucky Ho, the Senior Civic Engagement Coordinator at the Asian American Federation, where we proudly represent the collective voice of more than 70 member nonprofit organizations serving 1.5 million Asian New Yorkers.

I am submitting this testimony to express my ardent disapproval and opposition to the implementation of jungle primaries in New York City Elections. We appreciate the opportunity to provide testimony today regarding the proposed shift to a nonpartisan “jungle primary” system. While we support reforms that improve voter participation and equity, we must express serious concern with both the substance of the proposal and the process by which it has been advanced. AAF and many peer organizations were unable to provide testimony earlier in the public comment period, not due to disinterest, but because we were fully engaged in primary election civic engagement efforts. These included securing funding to support voter education, hosting multilingual town halls with candidates, and developing culturally competent resources such as ballot builders. The scheduling of public hearings during the busiest portion of the primary and legislative calendar excluded many critical voices from the conversation.

Moreover, with a final vote reportedly scheduled for next week, there has been insufficient time for meaningful public deliberation or education. We are concerned that this accelerated timeline risks undermining public confidence and informed participation in the democratic process. We understand that the intent of a jungle primary system is to broaden participation by allowing all candidates, regardless of party affiliation, to appear on a single ballot, with the top two vote-getters advancing to the general election. While this may seem like an appealing simplification, the data and lived experience in other jurisdictions suggest otherwise.

There is no conclusive evidence that jungle primaries increase voter turnout. In California, where this system has been in place since 2012, voter participation has not measurably improved. In fact, these primaries have frequently led to confusion, especially among voters who expect to vote within party lines. Additionally, the system often results in two candidates from the same political party advancing to the general election, effectively limiting voter choice rather than expanding it. Proponents argue that unaffiliated voters—roughly one million in New York City—are currently excluded. However, we must also acknowledge that more than two million registered Democrats do not participate in primaries. The solution is not to introduce a more complicated voting system, but to increase access to accurate, timely, and linguistically accessible civic education.

The proposed jungle primary system would pose significant risks to fair representation and equitable participation among Asian American communities. Asian American voters are not concentrated in one district or united by a single political ideology. In a crowded, nonpartisan race, our communities may be unable to consolidate support around a single candidate, especially when multiple Asian candidates are on the ballot. This dynamic can dilute our electoral power. Many voters in our communities have limited English proficiency. The removal of party labels from ballots will likely cause misunderstanding about how candidates are organized, potentially leading to undervoting or the belief that their preferred party is not represented. These misunderstandings disproportionately impact first-time, immigrant, and older voters.

We acknowledge that structural reforms can improve voter turnout and civic trust. One such reform that merits serious consideration is aligning municipal elections with higher-turnout even-year cycles. This proposal would consolidate elections with gubernatorial or presidential years, which we believe would substantially increase participation, particularly among low-propensity voters and limited-English-speaking populations, without introducing the same degree of voter confusion or electoral distortion.

The Asian American Federation urges the Commission to pause consideration of the jungle primary proposal. The magnitude of this change demands more robust engagement, education, and analysis. Community members and civic organizations need more time to fully understand the implications of this reform and to provide input that reflects the diversity of New York City.

We ask that the Commission prioritize reforms that expand participation equitably, protect minority representation, and uphold the integrity of our electoral processes. We at the Asian American Federation thank you for allowing us to testify and look forward to working with all of you to make sure our immigrant communities get the support they deserve. If you have any questions, I can be contacted by email at lucky.ho@aafederation.org or by phone at 929-412-1386.

Comments: Dear Commission, I am writing to express my strongest support for proposals 1-4, which would facilitate building new housing, and, in my opinion, address the most pressing need of working-class New Yorkers. I spent my formative years in NYC, and, after the imminent completion of my graduate studies, I intend to return to a city that I've come to see as truly the finest our country has to offer. It is unique in its cultural vibrancy, excellence, and the multitude of opportunities it confers upon a motivated individual. However, the most troubling trend has emerged: more and more people who move to New York come from well-to-do families who sponsor their kids' existence; more and more working-class people are being priced out of their home and leaving the state altogether; people are foregoing necessities such as food and their children's afterschool activities to scrape together enough money to pay rent. More and more properties appear to be "investment properties", sitting as empty cash stores of the ultra wealthy. I fear for the future of this city, for the injustices it appears not to see. I fear that it is losing its heart. One of the problems is that every town hall I wanted to attend fell at a time of day I couldn't go. Which working person is free at noon on a Tuesday? The answer tends to be well-off pensioners who own their homes and want to see their values go up. At the town halls, I'm afraid they may constitute a majority, but, being a highly biased sample of the city's population, they do not represent the interests of the vast majority of the city at large. The vast majority of the city at large wants more housing development, not less. High- to medium-density housing consisting of apartments of multiplexes located close to public transport, groceries, and childcare facilities is what the average New Yorker wants and needs. Proposals 1-4 offer a step in the direction of achieving this humble New York dream. Please don't let us down. Respectfully, Romaniya Voloshchuk In temporary exile from Ridgewood, Queens

Comments: I do not support efforts by Mayor Adams and his allies to upend existing New York party primaries. As a registered democrat, I value the opportunity to express my political preference as part of a longstanding community of democrats. We - the larger population of New York and New York City - ALREADY enjoy the opportunity to weigh in on our non-aligned neighbors' preferences in the general election. I truly believe that creating what are strangely called "jungle primaries" would make it LESS and not more likely that New Yorkers will participate in primary elections. Do the parties need to do a better job enlisting more unregistered residents? Yes. Is this suspiciously timed effort likely to do what the parties haven't? No. If voters see their efforts in the primaries as duplicative, then many of them will stay home. It's likely that corralling all the candidates into one primary would offer additional unfair advantages to wealthier, better-known candidates, already a problem, as obvious from the recent democratic NYC mayoral primary. I've heard way, way too many stories about people who were going to vote for a certain former governor entirely because he was the only name they recognized on the ballot. There need to be more non-partisan resources, most likely funded by the state, to make sure that voters see varied information on all the candidates, collected and distributed via diverse sources BEFORE early voting starts, especially the judges. Too many efforts focus on the final few days before primary day, which ignores all of the New Yorkers who have already voted and might have benefited from that information. Please stop this insane motion in its tracks and protect the electoral system that serves the needs of New Yorkers. I understand that the NYC Charter Revision Commission has a mandate to address the affordability crisis and it should be reminded to do its job. I'm a second generation New Yorker, having now lived in the state for 10 years and I love this city and this state. Thank you for your consideration.

To Whom It May Concern,

Jungle primaries are fundamentally anti-democratic at their core. They make it easier for a small number of wealthy donors to control electoral outcomes, which is a direct threat to the interests of the vast majority of citizens. When money can overwhelm grassroots support, the link between a representative and their constituency is broken. This system is designed to serve the agenda of the few at the expense of the many, and it stands in direct opposition to the principle of a government of, by, and for the people.

Hello,

I'm here to underline that jungle primaries are unpopular with voters, and they've rejected them consistently. These reforms don't achieve their stated goals. Last year, this was on the ballot in six states – Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota – and it failed in every single one. This is a clear signal that voters, across the political spectrum, understand the value of political parties. Don't waste our time and money on a proposition that's already been dismissed. If you want to increase voter turnout, stick with what's proven to work: even-year elections.

Best,

Adam Dunn

Adam

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, I am writing to strongly oppose the proposal to implement an open primary system in New York City. This initiative, led by Mayor Eric Adams, is not a genuine effort to strengthen democracy. Instead, it seems to be a transparent response to the outcome of this June's Democratic mayoral primary, where Councilmember Zohran Mamdani secured a clear victory. Let's be honest: if Mayor Adams still had strong support from voters and his party, he wouldn't be pushing for this change. He's doing it now because he was forced to run as an independent rather than face rejection by Democratic voters, mainly due to his indictment on corruption charges and his highly unpopular record in office. This proposal isn't just about one politician's self-interest. Open primaries pose a significant threat to grassroots democratic participation. In closed primaries, candidates and local political clubs spend months building power within their communities, organizing, registering voters, and creating coalitions that reflect the values and needs of their neighbors. Grassroots organizing strengthens our political system, empowering people who have historically been marginalized in city politics. Open primaries dilute that process. When voters who haven't been part of these efforts can cast decisive votes, the incentive to organize and build long-term infrastructure diminishes. This amounts to nothing short of a shortcut for candidates who can't make a base of their own. New York City's current closed primary system ensures that political parties select their nominees and promotes ongoing civic engagement. Open primaries, on the other hand, favor campaigns supported by big money, name recognition, and vague messaging designed to appeal to the broadest possible audience, rather than those based on trust and accountability. Let's be honest about the origins of this proposal. Mayor Adams has repeatedly shown a disregard for democratic norms and transparency. He might claim his proposal aims to expand voting rights, but make no mistake, it's about protecting his political future. If he weren't aligned with Donald Trump, he might already face more serious consequences for his actions in office. He has lost the trust of this city, and he shouldn't be allowed to manipulate the electoral process for his benefit and that of his allies, who want to set the rules of a game in which they shouldn't have undue influence. I urge you to reject this proposal. Your loyalty is to the people of New York City, not to a mayor whose actions have repeatedly undermined the public's confidence in local government. The city is watching, and we deserve a primary system that prioritizes organizing, accountability, and integrity, not opportunists seeking to manipulate the odds. Thank you for your time and service.

32BJ Written Testimony Regarding Questions 1 and 2 of the Interim Charter Proposal
July 15th, 2025

I, Candis Tall, am the executive vice president and political director of 32BJ SEIU. I am writing on behalf of our union and the 90,000 workers we represent in New York City. We are a member-driven union dedicated to ensuring that our workers share the prosperity of the industries that they contribute to. The foundation of our union is here in New York City, where our workers have attained a middle-class wage standard of living and affordable, high-quality healthcare.

As a labor union we know well that New York City faces a critical housing shortage. We believe our city can both build more affordable housing and create more middle-class residential service jobs. That is why we led the way fighting for the forward-thinking City of Yes framework and fighting for the much needed 485-x tax abatement.

The charter commission's land use recommendations fail to accomplish these two intertwined goals, threatening both the livelihoods of working people and local democracy in our communities. Through decades of involvement, 32BJ has used the land use process to create middle class jobs for tens of thousands of New Yorkers. We have been leading voices on our city's housing crisis and have supported housing time and time again while also providing for a decent standard of living for the people who work in these buildings. We have spoken before this commission previously about the importance of balancing the need to create more housing with important democratic checks and opportunities for public engagement that we use to protect standards for workers. Questions 1 and 2 do not strike that balance.

On Question 1: 32BJ does not support allowing affordable projects, regardless of size, to be approved by the Board of Standards and Appeals nor do we support allowing large, predominantly market rate projects in districts designated under the Fair Housing Framework to be approved by the City Planning Commission. While 32BJ emphatically supports the construction of more affordable housing, this should not come at the expense of the public's ability to weigh in on large projects which employ hundreds of New Yorkers and have significant impacts on the communities where they're built.

Community Board hearings, which would be retained under these proposals, are only relevant if the local councilmember, the democratically elected official who is accountable to that community board, has a say in final approvals. Otherwise, these hearings are not real public consultation. As such, we do not support ultimate approval authority going to unelected groups such as the Board of Standards and Appeals and City Planning Commission.

On Question 2: We are supportive of an expedited process for low-density R1-R5 districts and small-to-medium size developments in transit dense areas. However, awarding developers across the city a 30% bump in density, which in some areas could represent hundreds of units, without any check by the local councilmember is unacceptable.

32BJ continues to stand at the ready to fight for reforms that will increase supply while honoring workers and protecting communities. After significant communication with commission staff and analysts, we do not believe that these proposals meet those goals. We will be urging our tens of thousands of union brothers and sisters across the city to vote no on Questions 1 and 2.

Comments: For this city to be inclusive, diverse, and agile, we need more quality housing built safely, efficiently and quickly. The NIMBY movement has stifled growth, and well-intentioned regulation has become counter-productive hurdles to building what the city needs most. Privileged and well-organized groups such as Village Preservation have had an outsized voice in our city's land-use decisions. Let's keep building in the world's greatest city, so more people can stay and live here, rather than freeze it in time so it can become a Disney-like playground for the nostalgic, the rich and the entitled.

Testimony in Opposition to Expedited ULURP in Low-Density Areas

Presented to the NYC Charter Revision Commission

Submitted by: Richard C Hellenbrecht, First Vice Chair, Queens Community Board 13

Date: July 15, 2025

Thank you for the opportunity to present this testimony on behalf of Queens Community Board 13.

Queens Community Board 13 (QCB13) is primarily a low-density residential area in southeast Queens bordering Nassau County. This community district is a diverse area with a very high rate of home ownership by minority and immigrant families. Residents of Queens District 13 have repeatedly supported zoning to protect the quality of life in each of our neighborhoods. QCB13, therefore strongly opposes the proposal to expedite the Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) in low-density areas.

This proposal undermines the very principles of community engagement and transparency that ULURP was designed to uphold. Low-density neighborhoods like mine are not just zoning designations—they are living communities with unique histories, infrastructure limitations, and deeply rooted civic institutions. Accelerating the review process risks sidelining the voices of residents and community boards who are best positioned to evaluate the local impacts of proposed developments.

Key Concerns:

- Loss of Community Oversight: Expedited ULURP would reduce the time available for Community Boards and Borough Presidents to review and respond to proposals. This diminishes meaningful public input and weakens the checks and balances that protect neighborhood character.
- Infrastructure Strain: Many low-density areas, including parts of Eastern Queens, already face challenges with sewer capacity, school overcrowding, and limited public transit. Fast-tracking development without thorough environmental and infrastructure review and input from local community residents could exacerbate these issues.

- Precedent for Overdevelopment: By creating a “junior review” for “junior changes,” the proposal opens the door to incremental upzoning that could permanently alter the scale and livability of low-density neighborhoods.
- Equity and Fairness: Streamlining ULURP for modestly sized projects may seem efficient, but it disproportionately benefits developers while reducing protections for communities. The cost and uncertainty of ULURP are not flaws—they are safeguards against unchecked development. Owners in low-density areas made “the most expensive investments of their lives” with the faith in zoning and the expectation of an ongoing way of living.

Recommendations:

- Preserve the full ULURP timeline for all zoning changes in low-density districts.
- Require robust environmental and infrastructure assessments before any fast-track designation is granted.
- Ensure that Community Boards retain full authority to review and comment on all land use proposals, regardless of size or location.

In closing, on behalf of QCB13, I urge the City Planning Commission and the Charter Revision Commission to reject any proposal that weakens ULURP in low-density areas. Our neighborhoods deserve thoughtful planning, not rushed approvals.

Thank you.

Hello Commissioners,

It is time for this commission to acknowledge the clear public sentiment against open primaries. This is an unpopular and ineffective reform. The coordinated rejection of this proposal across six states last year—Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota—is a powerful message. Voters from all parts of the political spectrum value the traditional role of parties. I urge you to abandon this misguided effort and focus on reforms that have a proven track record of success, such as shifting more elections to even-numbered years.

Thanks,

Antonia Marrero

Testimony in Opposition to the Proposed NYC Land Use Appeals Board

Presented to the NYC Charter Revision Commission

Date: July 15, 2025

Thank you for the opportunity to present this testimony on behalf of Queens Community Board 13.

I strongly oppose the establishment of the proposed NYC Land Use Appeals Board. While the intent to streamline or democratize the land use process may be well-meaning, the framework as currently proposed raises serious concerns about transparency, public oversight, and institutional integrity.

Concerns About Accountability and Transparency

- The creation of an additional appeals body introduces ambiguity around jurisdiction and decision-making authority.
- There is insufficient clarity on how board members would be selected, vetted, and held accountable.
- Without robust public input mechanisms, this board risks operating with diminished community representation.

Potential Undermining of Established Processes

- New York City's Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP), while not perfect, has built-in opportunities for community boards, borough presidents, and the City Council to weigh in.
- This proposed board could override or dilute the voices of community-level stakeholders who are closest to the impact of land use decisions.

Risk of Politicization and Overconcentration of Power

- Land use decisions affect neighborhoods deeply—physically, culturally, and economically. A central appeals body risks privileging political expediency over local nuance.
- The proposal lacks guardrails to prevent conflicts of interest and political influence, particularly in high stakes rezoning applications.

Call for Strengthening Existing Structures Instead

- Rather than layering another board on top of an already complex system, we should invest in fortifying community boards and enhancing ULURP engagement.
- This could include expanded training for board members, better public education on land use issues, and ensuring timely access to environmental and economic impact studies.

In closing, I respectfully urge this body to reject the proposed NYC Land Use Appeals Board and instead focus on deepening transparency and empowering community-level review in our land use processes. Thank you.

Comments: To whom it may concern from the Charter Revision Commission: I'm writing as a New York City resident to express my opposition to the current proposal establishing an open primary top-two system for city elections. A top-two open primary, otherwise known as a "jungle primary," will decrease voter participation by forcing voters to make a choice between two candidates, potentially of the same party, during the general election. This leaves voters without a meaningful choice. It also disadvantages grassroots, community-backed candidates by making them compete in a massive primary field, which are often very expensive, and splits the vote making it harder for these candidates to break through. A top-two open primary will discourage grassroots challengers from working-class, diverse communities from running for election. The goal of a primary election system should be to increase participation from candidates and voters from all walks of life. We already have this system with ranked-choice voting, which is compatible with other primary election systems Arguments in favor of the proposal state that this primary system would increase voter participation in local elections, but the research presented by the Charter Revision Commission's own preliminary report contradicts that claim. California's switch to an open primary top-two system actually saw a decrease in voter turnout for midterm and presidential primaries in that research, and California has seen consistently low primary turnout over the last decade, especially for communities of color. Given this evidence, putting this "jungle primary" system to a vote on the November ballot without meaningful input from the public, especially without consideration for other forms of semi-open or open primary systems, is undemocratic at best. I ask the Charter Revision Commission to reconsider this proposal and leave this issue off the November general election ballot until significant research into other systems is done with meaningful consideration and input from the general public. Thank you, Genny Roman

Dear Commissioners,

The push for jungle primaries is an old story with a new cover. Billionaires, following the playbook written by figures like Mike Bloomberg, are trying to rig the system in their favor. Their goal is to eliminate the influence of labor unions so they can privatize public assets without a fight. This isn't about improving democracy or increasing turnout; it's about shifting power permanently toward the wealthy. We've seen and defeated this tactic before, and we must stand together to defeat it once again for the sake of all working families.

Best,

Asiah Quattlebaum

Testimony in Opposition to the Affordable Housing Fast Track Proposal

Presented to the NYC Charter Revision Commission

Date: July 15, 2025

Thank you for the opportunity to present this testimony on behalf of Queens Community Board 13.

Queens Community Board 13 (QCB13) is primarily a low-density residential area in southeast Queens bordering Nassau County. This community district is a diverse area with a very high rate of home ownership by minority and immigrant families. Residents of Queens District 13 have repeatedly supported zoning to protect the quality of life in each of our neighborhoods. QCB13, therefore strongly opposes the proposed Affordable Housing Fast Track initiative.

While I recognize the urgency of New York City's housing crisis, I am deeply concerned that this proposal prioritizes speed over substance, bypassing critical safeguards that protect our communities, environment, and democratic process. I believe that the proposal will significantly disadvantage desirable low-density areas of the city that are rapidly diminishing. Fast tracking development in 12 specific districts of the city would increase suburban flight and further discourage resident ownership.

Lack of Environmental Review and Community Input

The proposal's elimination of environmental review for certain developments is alarming. Our neighborhoods are not blank slates—they contain legacy industrial sites, aging infrastructure, and environmental vulnerabilities. Fast-tracking without proper assessment risks placing families near toxic or flood-prone areas. Moreover, removing opportunities for public comment undermines the very communities these projects claim to serve.

Affordability Without Accountability

The term “affordable housing” must be more than a label. Without clear definitions and enforceable affordability thresholds, we risk incentivizing market-rate development under the guise of public benefit. True affordability must reflect the income realities of working families, seniors, and marginalized communities, not just developer metrics.

Equity and Transparency in Land Use

This proposal accelerates approvals in districts that have permitted the least affordable housing, but it fails to address why those districts have resisted development: concerns about displacement, infrastructure strain, and loss of neighborhood character. Streamlining must not become a euphemism for sidelining local voices.

A Call for Balanced Reform

We need thoughtful reform that will provide housing opportunities while retaining the quality of life our residents have invested in and rightfully expect to maintain. On behalf of QCB13 I urge the Commission to consider alternatives that preserve environmental review, guarantee affordability, and ensure robust community engagement. Let's build housing that is not only fast, but fair, safe, and sustainable.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing to express strong support for all proposals — 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, to help New York City address the current housing shortage and ensure elections are more representative. Proposal 1 and Proposal 2 are sensible. Prioritizing affordable housing will lead to more housing construction and a faster review process will give a greater incentive to build smaller apartments that are currently difficult to build when subject to ULURP. Proposal 3 will ensure that development benefits the city as a whole, rather than being subject to City Council member deference. Proposal 4 would be a wonderful move towards modernizing the land use processes of NYC. Proposal 5 would lead to greater voter turnout, making elections more representative. Potential proposal 6 is a fantastic idea, allowing all voters to participate regardless of party affiliation will encourage candidates to appeal to a broader electorate. I recommend giving all New Yorkers a voice in choosing their representatives. Thanks for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. I hope all six measures make it to the November ballot so that New York can decide on these important reforms. Frederick Kozlowski Williamsburg 11206

Dear Commissioners,

The push for "Jungle Primaries" so soon after the adoption of RCV is a perfect example of how to alienate an electorate. It signals that our electoral system is a playground for political theorists, not a stable process for public decision-making. Voters deserve consistency. They deserve time to learn and adapt to one set of rules. This proposal yanks the rug out from under them, creating confusion that will inevitably drive down participation. We must reject this move and reaffirm our commitment to the RCV system.

Best,

ATTN Commissioners:

Jungle primary reforms are a bad idea, plain and simple. They're unpopular with voters, and they've been rejected repeatedly at the ballot box. The argument that they achieve stated goals just doesn't hold up. Last year, this very concept was put before voters in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota, and it was voted down in all six states. This shows that voters, regardless of their political leanings, understand the value of political parties in selecting candidates. This commission should not waste our time and money pushing something voters clearly don't want. If you want more people to vote, stick with proven methods like even-year elections.

To Whom It May Concern,

I urge the commission to remove jungle primaries from its agenda. This is a deeply unpopular reform that has been defeated every time it has faced a serious public test. The six defeats in six states last year—Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota—provide all the evidence necessary. This cross-partisan rejection should be a clear signal to this body. Let us not waste any more time on this issue and instead focus on proven ways to increase voter engagement, such as the strategic use of even-year elections.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. As a lifelong Manhattan resident, I'm writing to express strong support for all six proposals to make New York City more affordable and more representative. Proposal 1 would make it easier and faster to produce affordable housing, lowering costs and ensuring that all neighborhoods contribute to solving this crisis. Proposal 2 would allow for incremental rezonings of the sort which aren't currently possible now through its creation of the new expedited process. I agree with the currently proposed idea of expediting projects which modestly increase housing on those sites. Furthermore, beyond what's currently proposed, I also support the expansion of this process where context-appropriate to include the addition of residential space to light manufacturing areas. The current system of member deference gives individual councilmembers outsized power to block citywide priorities. Proposal 3's Appeals Board would be a step in the right direction in this aspect, allowing for the overriding of a council vote when citywide electeds deem it necessary. I also support a potential expansion to five members as a change to the proposal, as Comptroller Brad Lander expressed support for during the public comment process, including the comptroller and potentially the public advocate in such decisions as well. A unified City Map is a long-overdue step, as the current system can impose significant costs on infrastructure, housing, and other projects. Proposal 4's Digital City Map would allow processes that today take months or even years to occur nearly instantly. I also support considering Open New York's recommendations for a fairer and more affordable NYC, many of which are already very well-aligned with the commission's proposals. I encourage the commission to dedicate additional time to exploring Open New York's proposal to bring the housing shortage into landmarks decisions. Proposal 5 is a clear step towards increasing participation in our city's democracy. On-year elections would improve the abysmal turnout that is often seen in city elections, allowing a broader segment of the population to weigh in on matters critical to our city's future. I urge the Commission to move forward with Proposal 6 as well. Over 1 million voters are currently unable to weigh into a critical part of the voting process, and indeed one which often determines the winner. As a 21-year-old, those 1 million include many friends of mine, who lack trust in the major parties but who would be active participants in the primary process if allowed. I urge the Commission to put all six measures on the November ballot so that voters can weigh in. Sincerely, Charlie J Garfield Upper West Side 10024

Opinion

Keep NYC open primary off this year's ballot

New York Daily News

By L. Joy Williams and Susan Lerner

July 12, 2025

PUBLISHED: July 12, 2025 at 5:00 AM EDT

This November, New Yorkers could be asked to vote on a ballot proposal to “open” NYC’s local primaries to all voters regardless of political affiliation. The idea may sound simple, but the commission tasked with evaluating these reforms has embraced the concept without doing the important work to understand how it would function — or whether it would actually benefit voters.

Opening our primaries is an incredibly complex effort that requires thoughtful implementation, broad consensus, and a deep understanding of city voters in order to make a difference. Instead, the commission is considering putting a rushed, unfinished concept onto the ballot that risks significant unintended consequences with no clear benefit to the public.

As leaders in the fight to pass major election reforms here in New York, we firmly believe that such a significant change should not be so flippantly put to voters. We urge the commission to slow down — not because this issue is not worth considering, but because this proposal is simply not ready for a decision.

Last year, Mayor Adams created a Charter Revision Commission to examine how the city can address a historic housing shortage. They are expected to propose a series of ballot questions asking New Yorkers to consider changes to how, when and where the city can build. But along the way, the commission expanded its focus to review our elections. Voters will likely be asked to decide whether our elections should be moved to align with federal elections in even-numbered years.

Opening up our primaries isn’t necessarily an issue that we object to, and amending our election system is not inherently a bad idea. But it is also an incredibly delicate process that must be done right.

In 2023, Common Cause New York issued a report on New York’s “unaffiliated” voters, who represent more than a million voters in New York City and are now the second largest voting bloc citywide.

Currently, these voters are locked out of the primaries. The commission’s likeliest proposal to fix this — known as a jungle primary — would take from California and other places that have made the switch (with muddled success, to be clear) by pitting all candidates against one another in one giant primary.

The commission has said it believes this could empower unaffiliated voters to have more say in meaningful elections, but it has not seriously considered any other forms of open primaries or heard balanced testimony about the impact of adopting different formats (spoiler alert: many academics say it has little, if any impact on turn out or other factors).

Significant changes tried elsewhere cannot just be applied to New York and expected to work without issue. The voting patterns of different communities, the history of our elections, and the recent introduction of other reforms are unlike anywhere else. Any changes to our elections must be evaluated fully, and include rigorous thought and research into how it would impact NYC's unique environment for better or worse.

Amending our primary system can still be done smartly. But rushing such a substantive change on the ballot creates unnecessary division. Many of the community-based groups, who talk to voters day in and day out, and who led previous election reform efforts, have told the commission they were unaware changes to our primaries were under consideration. Giving them more time to research potential impacts and understand what's at stake for the voters they work with would help significantly.

And even though proponents of open primaries have urged the commission to put the question to New Yorkers as soon as possible, we have nearly four years before it would make a difference anyway. New York's next municipal elections will not happen until 2029, meaning affected communities can consider the various forms of open primaries that best suit NYC's unique circumstances and build a citywide consensus that future commissions could address.

This Charter Revision Commission seems to understand that despite their best efforts, this proposal is not ready for the public. That's why they have yet to confirm whether it will appear on this year's ballot alongside other questions.

With less than two weeks until a final decision, we urge the commission not to rush this critical issue. Action to expand ballot access is good, and we commend the commissioners for recognizing the importance of including all voters in the democratic process. But when it comes to changing our elections, getting it right is far more important than doing it quickly. We've seen how election reform can be done well. Let's continue that work.

Comments: I am opposed to interference with our primary elections governance and any proposals meant to discourage primaries. If the commission's primary goal is to increase turnout, the way to do that is to go to even-year primaries, because data shows that jungle primaries fail to do so. Consider moving city elections to even-numbered years, aligned with new state law. Local participation is significantly higher in cities where local elections are aligned with presidential elections. Thank you, -- Josh Eckert-Chu, concerned voter.

Commissioners,

I want to conclude by urging my colleagues to reject the false promise of jungle primaries. They are not a panacea for what ails our democracy. They are a distraction from the real work that needs to be done. Let's have the courage to admit that this experiment has failed and move on to a more productive conversation about how we can strengthen our democracy and increase voter participation. The future of our country depends on it.

Testimony Before the New York City Charter Revision Commission
Re: Opposition to the Consideration of a “Jungle Primary” System
Delivered by Dori Dietz Blitz, Democratic Committee Member
July 15, 2025

Good afternoon Commissioners,

Thank you for the opportunity to testify today. My name is Luke Hayes.

I am here to express my very strong opposition to the proposed adoption of a so-called “jungle primary” system for New York City elections. The public has not been adequately informed or engaged, and should have been for a change of this magnitude . It should come only after a robust, charter revision process—one that includes multilingual education campaigns, community listening sessions, expert testimony from across the political spectrum, and an extended deliberation period. What we have instead is a rushed proposal, with little explanation, little data, and little outreach—especially to voters in the communities most likely to be harmed. We’ve seen how rushed reforms, however well-intentioned, can backfire when voters don’t understand what’s at stake. Imposing a fundamental redesign of our elections without clear public demand or broad-based consent is not just misguided—it is undemocratic.

This process undermines faith in the democratic system itself, one that I have believed in my entire life! It sends the message that our election rules can be rewritten from the top down, without the kind of transparency and accountability that is the bedrock of our democracy. That is a dangerous precedent—especially in a moment when trust in democratic institutions is already so fragile.

There are ways to improve democracy in this city. But these start with listening to the people, listening to many people by garnering input across the board—not bypassing us.

For that reason, I strongly urge the Commission to reject any effort to advance a jungle primary system, and to commit instead to a public process rooted in transparency, equity, and community voice.

Thank you.

Luke Hayes

Comments: Good afternoon Commissioners, Thank you for the opportunity to testify today. My name is Luke Hayes. I am here to express my very strong opposition to the proposed adoption of a so-called "jungle primary" system for New York City elections. The public has not been adequately informed or engaged, and should have been for a change of this magnitude . It should come only after a robust, charter revision process—one that includes multilingual education campaigns, community listening sessions, expert testimony from across the political spectrum, and an extended deliberation period. What we have instead is a rushed proposal, with little explanation, little data, and little outreach—especially to voters in the communities most likely to be harmed. We've seen how rushed reforms, however well-intentioned, can backfire when voters don't understand what's at stake. Imposing a fundamental redesign of our elections without clear public demand or broad-based consent is not just misguided—it is undemocratic. This process undermines faith in the democratic system itself, one that I have believed in my entire life! It sends the message that our election rules can be rewritten from the top down, without the kind of transparency and accountability that is the bedrock of our democracy. That is a dangerous precedent—especially in a moment when trust in democratic institutions is already so fragile. There are ways to improve democracy in this city. But these start with listening to the people, listening to many people by garnering input across the board—not bypassing us. For that reason, I strongly urge the Commission to reject any effort to advance a jungle primary system, and to commit instead to a public process rooted in transparency, equity, and community voice. Thank you. Luke Hayes

Hello, This proposal for "Jungle Primaries" must be seen for what it is: an unnecessary and damaging complication. New York voters are still adjusting to the complexities of Ranked-Choice Voting. To introduce another entirely new system now would be to invite chaos and suppress the vote. The best way to improve our elections is to make them simpler and more predictable, not to add more confusing and untested layers. Let's focus on proven solutions, like consolidating elections, and give our current RCV system a real chance to succeed. Thanks, Nina Milnes

Comments: See attached document with my testimony regarding the Mayor's Charter Revision Commission Final Proposal 2025. These comments relate to the 4 affordable housing ballot proposals. As a general comment, I think these topics are far too complex and radical to be understood as ballot proposals. Is there a way to fast-track them through the legislative process? Proposed wording changes are included in the document below to get them into more understandable plain English, and to have consistency across the topics.

GENERAL SUGGESTIONS REGARDING BALLOT PROPOSALS

1. Each Ballot Proposal should identify where the proposal originates, for example, which NYC Charter Revision Commission is presenting the proposal (Mayor's or City Council's). It should be written in plain English, spelling out the full names of the city departments and processes when they are first used with the acronyms abbreviated in parentheses following the full name. Acronyms can be used following the first use. The problem(s) to be solved, the impact(s) of the proposal, pros and cons of the proposal should be explained simply and clearly, trying to avoid uncommon words and unnecessarily repetitive words.
2. Wherever possible, changes to the NYC Charter and governance should be done by normal legislative processes and/or NYC Rules changes. This is especially important when the public needs to be educated about the changes through public outreach and education in order to make a good decision. The right law will be more effective than a quick law.

BALLOT QUESTIONS RELATING TO AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Below are proposed changes to the wording (based on suggestion #1 above) of the Ballot Questions relating to production of affordable housing followed by some comments. I may not have understood all of the nuances of the questions and proposals.

BALLOT QUESTION #1

Ballot Question #1: Fast Tracking Affordable Housing

The Mayor's NYC Charter Revision Commission proposes a two-part amendment to the NYC Charter that would create new fast track public processes for publicly financed affordable housing.

1. The amendment would create a new zoning waiver authority (The Fast Track Zoning Waiver) for publicly financed affordable housing projects administered by the city's Board of Standards and Appeals (BSA).
2. The amendment would establish an expedited public review process for applications that deliver affordable housing in the community districts that produce the least affordable housing.

Goal: To allow affordable housing to be produced more quickly and at lower cost, offering deeper levels of affordability and ensuring that every community adds affordable housing.

Description: The Fast Track Zoning Waiver would be available for projects subject to the city's Mandatory Inclusionary Housing (MIH) zoning rules. The Fast Track process would create income-restricted rental and homeownership opportunities affordable to families at lower incomes. Housing Development Fund Companies (HDFCs), entities formed exclusively to develop housing projects for persons of low income, would be eligible for the Affordable Housing Fast Track Zoning Waiver. A significant portion of these developments will be permanently affordable under MIH and the Universal Affordability Preference (UAP). The city's Board of Standards and Appeals (BSA) would have a new action, the Affordable Housing Fast Track Zoning Waiver. In order to grant these waivers, the BSA must provide assurance that an approved project will be compatible with a neighborhood's existing built context and complies with the city's Department of Housing Preservation and Development (HPD) development standards, with HPD providing verification. Generally, an applicant will be required to produce a letter from HPD or another government entity demonstrating a non-binding commitment to finance the project. When an application is filed, the BSA would be required immediately to refer a Fast Track application to the affected Community Board and Borough President, where they will conduct a concurrent 60-day review period. They may hold hearings and may provide recommendations to the BSA. The Department of City Planning (DCP) would then have 30 days to review an eligible application and hold a final vote.

The existing Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) process is replaced by the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP), a streamlined review process for specific categories of eligible housing and infrastructure projects.

The Fast Track Zoning Waiver would also establish a new public review procedure for applications that deliver affordable housing in the community districts that permit the least affordable housing. Building on the City Council's Fair Housing Framework, every five years, the City will release a report on the rate of affordable housing permitting in each of the 59 Community Districts over the past 5 years. In the 12 Community Districts that permitted the least affordable housing, rezoning applications that are required to deliver affordable housing under the City's Mandatory Inclusionary Housing (MIH) program would have access to a new land use procedure: the Affordable Housing Fast Track Waiver.

Impact: Part 1. The new process shortens the time and simplifies the approval process for eligible affordable housing development, which is expected to stimulate more affordable housing development. It shortens the process by eliminating required approvals by elected officials (NYC Council) and environmental reviews. Adding residential density may impact traffic, infrastructure, schools, city services, etc. The impact will not be analyzed before getting the permit.

Impact: Part 2. All community districts will be required to build new affordable housing in their communities.

Comments on content of Ballot Question #1:

This proposal does not seem appropriate for a ballot proposal. It is very complex, and difficult for a lay person to understand. I understand that there is a housing crisis. Ideally this would be fast-tracked as legislation. But there may be doubts that legislation as would pass quickly, as this proposal concentrates approvals for eligible new affordable development approvals in the Mayor's office.

Such extreme steps may be necessary to get affordable housing to be built. The proposal does limit the initiatives to the MIH framework and to a special category of developers. This makes it more palatable.

I would like to see more explicit wording to include adaptive reuse of good old existing buildings rather than just “new” affordable housing development in Part 1 of Ballot Question 1. I urge NYC to protect landmark districts and built environment.

Part 2 of the proposed change seems arbitrary and is essentially an undesirable quota system. Quota systems do not usually get the intended results. It could be unfair to neighborhoods that have large amounts of existing affordable housing, unless "net", not "new" affordable housing metrics are used to determine the neighborhoods with the “least affordable housing” and also the amount of space that can be developed. It is based on the NYC Council's recent Fair Housing Framework, which is a "one size fits all" program that does not realistically consider the special economics of housing development in Manhattan, the smallest, densest and most expensive area in the world (according to Wikipedia. In addition, Manhattan includes a large number of public buildings (the United Nations, government offices, colleges and universities, hospitals, cultural and entertainment venues and the Central Business District (CBD) with commercial buildings. The outer boroughs, which are far less dense, have much more available space to develop. Small tweaks to zoning will not adequately solve the affordability issue in Manhattan. MIH has made things worse in some parts of Manhattan by incentivizing tearing down existing older deeply affordable buildings to put up new luxury housing with less density and less affordability ("affordable for whom?"). This Charter change attempts to correct this deficiency with MIH, but will it create net additional affordable housing where the new amount of affordable housing is more than what used to be there?

The Fair Housing Framework does not reward or accommodate success, and it is inflexible. Should some provision be made for a time when the affordable vacancy rate rises to 5%, as an example? NYC is best when a framework is created that enables developers to respond flexibly to current market needs. As a worst case scenario, what if NYC goes into a period where there is a loss of population, some luxury buildings go bankrupt and are taken over by the city, and the city doesn't need more housing? Should the ballot proposal be repealed? What if all boroughs added 500,000 units of affordable housing across all boroughs in the first 4 years after passing the ballot proposal? Should the ballot proposal then be suspended or repealed? This is an unlikely scenario, but it illustrates the inflexible nature of the proposal.

SUGGESTION:

With The Fair Housing Framework we are fighting yesterday's war. For the new and better NYC we should be focusing more on decentralizing affordable residential and mixed-use development to the outer boroughs. Focusing more on the outer boroughs will lead to the development of several new live/work/play neighborhoods that people want today, all within greater NYC, so that many residents will not have to travel to the CBD for work and entertainment.

The Charter proposal should include a provision and metric for when the program is successful, such as a 5% affordable vacancy rate. What should happen then?

The Charter proposal should use a combined metric of "net" affordable housing in a neighborhood, not just "new" affordable housing. The metric should take available development space into consideration.

What happens when we've done everything right or if the city loses population and there is no longer a housing crisis? Should this proposal have an expiration date when it must be reviewed and renewed if needed?

And finally, the city must enforce the existing laws to make sure that all new residential housing is not turned into short-term housing ("airBnB" law). I can't prove it, but I have the impression that some apartments in Midtown Manhattan are still illegal airBnBs.

BALLOT QUESTION 2: Simplify Review of Eligible Housing and Infrastructure Projects

The Mayor's NYC Charter Revision Commission proposes an amendment to the NYC Charter to create a simplified review process, known as the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP).

The following actions would be eligible for ELURP:

- Zoning proposals that increase residential capacity:
  - In low-density residential neighborhoods (R1-R5 districts), multifamily housing would be allowed up to a height of 45 feet and a maximum floor area ratio (FAR) of 2.
  - In medium- and high-density residential areas (R6 and up), zoning changes that increase residential capacity by 30% or less.
- Sale of city property to Housing Development Fund Companies (HDFCs), the vehicle for virtually all Department of Housing Preservation and Development (HPD)-subsidized, 100% affordable housing projects.
- City acquisition of land for affordable housing.
- Zoning (City Map) changes related to affordable housing.

- Infrastructure and resiliency projects, such as projects to prevent flooding by raising the grade of a street and to build solar panels on public land.
- Sale of small or otherwise unusable sliver lots owned by the city.
- City Map changes for affordable housing projects or to facilitate low-density housing. Today, the Charter requires a lengthy review process just to revise the City Map, delaying or preventing many affordable housing projects or low-density developments from occurring.
- City Map changes for resiliency projects, including street raisings to protect vulnerable communities from flooding, and clean-up actions in conjunction with acquisitions adjacent to mapped streets or parks.
- Site selections for resiliency, open space, and solar power to make it easier for the City to build new open space, protect flood-prone communities, or build solar panels on City-owned property.
- Dispositions for solar power on public land to simplify the process of putting solar panels on public buildings and other public land.
- Voluntary flood buyouts, and acquisitions of small or irregular sites adjacent to City-owned property for resiliency purposes to allow the City to quickly get homeowners out of harm's way in flood-prone areas, and to expedite resiliency projects across the five boroughs.
- Any other categories proposed by the Department of City Planning (DCP) and approved by the City Council in the future.

Goal: Stimulate affordable housing development.

Impact: Elimination of lengthy public review when the City seeks to buy, sell or transfer land for affordable housing and for zoning (City Map) changes related to resiliency, open space and solar power.

COMMENTS:

Changes to wording of Ballot Question 2 have been made for clarity and consistency (of department names, etc.) I may not be understanding all of the nuances.

This Ballot Question is more complex than it initially appeared to be on first reading. Again, ideally this would be done legislatively, not through a ballot proposal so that it could be discussed and understood better by voters.

I do not agree that a 30% increase in height (FAR) is “modest” for zones R6 and up. Maybe 15% could be considered modest. This will make already dense neighborhoods much denser with impacts on traffic, schools, infrastructure, city services, etc. Can these older areas handle such density? Is the City prepared to allocate some of the city-owned property in this area to schools? And to dig up the streets for infrastructure upgrades?

Much power would be ceded to the Mayor’s office, taking it from the community and City Council. I understand why these changes are thought to be necessary—it’s the housing crisis! But what happens when we’ve done everything right or if the city loses population and there is no longer a housing crisis? Should this proposal have an expiration date when it must be reviewed and renewed if needed?

Would City Council provide oversight? Would the oversight group for HPD and DCP be funded? There’s lots of room for corruption and over-zealous destruction of existing housing and good old buildings.

I would like to see explicit protections for landmarked districts and built environment.

BALLOT QUESTION 3: Establish a Land Use Appeals Board with Council, Borough, and Citywide Voices

The Mayor's NYC Charter Revision Commission proposes an amendment to the NYC Charter to eliminate the Mayor’s Veto power in the Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) and replace it with a new Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) Appeals Board, consisting of the Borough President of the affected borough, the Speaker of the City Council, and the Mayor. The Appeals Board would have the power to reverse City Council decisions on certain land use matters — but only if two out of these three democratically elected officials agree.

Impact: This proposal would affect development eligible for ULURP. It lessens the authority of the Mayor to reverse City Council decisions.

BALLOT QUESTION 4: Modernizing the City Map

The City Map establishes the legally defined locations of street lines and widths, street names, and legal grades, as well as the locations of mapped parkland and public places. Consolidation of the five boroughs into New York City occurred over 125 years ago, but a unified City Map of all five boroughs has never been adopted.

This proposal would require the City to consolidate the functions of the five borough maps into a unified City Map under the jurisdiction of the Department of City Planning (DCP) by January 1, 2028. DCP would administer the City Map change process, working with land use applicants before, during, and after formal public review.

This proposal would also require the promulgation of a legally effective Digital City Map, with a city mapping action to begin Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) for approval by January 1, 2029.

SUGGESTION: Make this Ballot Question 1, as there are references to City Map in Ballot Question 3.

Comments: See attached testimony opposing Expedited ULURP in low density areas. I am a long time resident of Bellerose, Queens, and an active participant in civic affairs and neighborhood preservation. I strongly oppose the proposal to expedite the Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) in low-density areas. This proposal undermines the very principles of community engagement and transparency that ULURP was designed to uphold. Low-density neighborhoods like mine are not just zoning designations—they are living communities with unique histories, infrastructure limitations, and deeply rooted civic institutions. Accelerating the review process risks sidelining the voices of residents and community boards who are best positioned to evaluate the local impacts of proposed developments. Key Concerns: Loss of Community Oversight: Expedited ULURP would reduce the time available for Community Boards and Borough Presidents to review and respond to proposals. This diminishes meaningful public input and weakens the checks and balances that protect neighborhood character. Infrastructure Strain: Many low-density areas, including parts of Eastern Queens, already face challenges with sewer capacity, school overcrowding, and limited public transit. Fast-tracking development without thorough environmental and infrastructure review and input from local community residents could exacerbate these issues. Precedent for Overdevelopment: By creating a “junior review” for “junior changes,” the proposal opens the door to incremental upzoning that could permanently alter the scale and livability of low-density neighborhoods. Equity and Fairness: Streamlining ULURP for modestly sized projects may seem efficient, but it disproportionately benefits developers while reducing protections for communities. The cost and uncertainty of ULURP are not flaws—they are safeguards against unchecked development. Owners in low-density areas made “the most expensive investments of their lives” with the faith in zoning and the expectation of an ongoing way of living. Recommendations: Preserve the full ULURP timeline for all zoning changes in low-density districts. Require robust environmental and infrastructure assessments before any fast-track designation is granted. Ensure that Community Boards retain full authority to review and comment on all land use proposals, regardless of size or location. In closing, I urge the City Planning Commission and the Charter Revision Commission to reject any proposal that weakens ULURP in low-density areas. Our neighborhoods deserve thoughtful planning, not rushed approvals. Thank you. James Delaney

Testimony in Opposition to Expedited ULURP in Low-Density Areas

Submitted by: James Delaney

Location: Bellerose, Queens, NY

Thank you for the opportunity to speak.

I am a long time resident of Bellerose, Queens, and an active participant in civic affairs and neighborhood preservation. I strongly oppose the proposal to expedite the Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) in low-density areas.

This proposal undermines the very principles of community engagement and transparency that ULURP was designed to uphold. Low-density neighborhoods like mine are not just zoning designations—they are living communities with unique histories, infrastructure limitations, and deeply rooted civic institutions. Accelerating the review process risks sidelining the voices of residents and community boards who are best positioned to evaluate the local impacts of proposed developments.

Key Concerns:

- Loss of Community Oversight: Expedited ULURP would reduce the time available for Community Boards and Borough Presidents to review and respond to proposals. This diminishes meaningful public input and weakens the checks and balances that protect neighborhood character.
- Infrastructure Strain: Many low-density areas, including parts of Eastern Queens, already face challenges with sewer capacity, school overcrowding, and limited public transit. Fast-tracking development without thorough environmental and infrastructure review and input from local community residents could exacerbate these issues.
- Precedent for Overdevelopment: By creating a “junior review” for “junior changes,” the proposal opens the door to incremental upzoning that could permanently alter the scale and livability of low-density neighborhoods.
- Equity and Fairness: Streamlining ULURP for modestly sized projects may seem efficient, but it disproportionately benefits developers while reducing protections for communities. The cost and uncertainty of ULURP are not flaws—they are safeguards against unchecked development. Owners in low-density areas made “the most expensive investments of their lives” with the faith in zoning and the expectation of an ongoing way of living.

Recommendations:

- Preserve the full ULURP timeline for all zoning changes in low-density districts.
- Require robust environmental and infrastructure assessments before any fast-track designation is granted.
- Ensure that Community Boards retain full authority to review and comment on all land use proposals, regardless of size or location.

In closing, I urge the City Planning Commission and the Charter Revision Commission to reject any proposal that weakens ULURP in low-density areas. Our neighborhoods deserve thoughtful planning, not rushed approvals.

Thank you.

Comments: I am completely against an new changes in the primary elections. I don't think that opening a primary election to every registered voter rather than Reps or Dems will not be fair and will destroy the political process. Let people register as one or another and vote in those primaries. It is confusing enough the way it is now- ranked voting. I feel my vote doesn't count.

NYSFAH Testimony
New York City Charter Revision Commission
July 15, 2025

My name is Lorrie Pizzola, I am the Policy Director for the New York State Association for Affordable Housing (NYSFAH) the trade association representing affordable housing professionals across New York City and State.

NYSFAH previously submitted detailed testimony on April 23, 2025, at the Manhattan Public Input Session on Housing and Land Use. In review of the Commission's Interim Report released on July 1, 2025, we are pleased to support recommendations aimed at making the land use system faster, fairer, and more responsive to the urgent need for affordable housing.

RECALIBRATE THE ULURP PROCESS

ULURP currently amplifies narrow opposition and enables "member deference" that blocks needed housing. We support reforms to rebalance the process:

- Empower the City Planning Commission (CPC) to override Council votes with a supermajority.
- Replace Mayoral veto with a transparent, line-item modification process.
- Add the Council Speaker to CPC for earlier citywide input.
- Make Council review optional.

These changes help ensure local input is considered but not used to stall housing that serves citywide needs.

STREAMLINE SMALL PROJECTS

We support a streamlined process Expedited Land Use Review Process (ELURP) for low-impact and small-scale projects that don't require full Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) or an Environmental Impact Statement (EIS). Allowing Borough Presidents to review these proposals would reduce delays and free up resources for larger efforts.

FAST-TRACK AFFORDABLE HOUSING (≤165% AMI)

We urge the creation of a fast-track process for affordable housing, especially for projects on public land that require no zoning change. Projects serving households earning up to 165% of AMI, including low-, moderate-, and middle-income families, should qualify, aligning with Housing Development Fund Corporation (HDFC) and Article XI standards. These changes will reduce costs and accelerate urgently needed development.

PROJECT SPECIFIC ZONING RELIEF

Granting the Board of Standards and Appeals authority to issue project-specific zoning waivers for affordable housing is critical. Relief should be based on necessity and community compatibility, without changing underlying zoning.

CONCLUSION

The ULURP process is outdated and imbalanced. The 2025 Charter Revision Commission's recommendations point the way toward a more efficient, equitable system. NYSAFAH supports reforms that prioritize affordable housing, expand tools for Borough Presidents, and create faster approval pathways. We stand ready to partner with the city to make these solutions a reality.

Contact: Lorrie Pizzola, NYSAFAH Policy Director at [REDACTED]

- (1) Oppose ELURP and Fast Track – both would decrease community board influence by removing council review; as many have stated the community boards advisory votes are only meaningful when backed up by the local council members binding ability to negotiate these recommendations with a developer.
- (2) While an attempt to address fair share issues in affordable housing production, the fast track process just doubles down on developer led spot rezonings, the weakest method of producing affordable housing since these were permitted by the MIH law in 2015. Out of a total of 111,000 units of affordable housing constructed since 2010 (NYC Open Data HPD); these developer spot rezonings are responsible for fewer than 10,000 or 10% of the income restricted units, with the rest coming from broader department of city planning rezonings (including those prior to 2010) or as of right development including via the 421-a tax credit or other government subsidy programs. These weak numbers are not due to council member opposition or a long drawn out ULURP process (as stated in previous testimony, most of the approvals time is pre – ulurp or even pre-filing). Out of nearly 400 developer rezonings, only a handful were withdrawn prior to a city council vote due to opposition by the local council member, while I am aware of only one – the Lenox Terrace development - which was voted down by the city council after being approved by the city planning commission. This out of scale proposal would have added over 1000 units of luxury housing and subjected 1700 rent stabilized tenants to a decade of construction by a landlord already accused by tenants of being a bad actor. Moreover, as has been pointed out many times, the power to spot rezone for affordable housing has not led to certain community districts contributing a meaningful amount of affordable housing over the last 15 years. The inescapable conclusion is that when left up to them, individual developers, including non profit affordable housing developers, will hit the same neighborhoods over and over again, or prefer not to build affordable housing at the 60-80% AMI levels expected under MIH, and as a group aren't physically or financially able to generate a large volume of affordable units in a reasonable time frame (a few sites have still built nothing a decade after getting their rezonings approved, i.e. the 125 Edgewater rezoning in Staten Island where an 18 acre site is now for sale by the original developer). Even worse, although not every spot rezoning is rejected by communities, they have the potential to disrupt careful urban planning representing years of work by communities, city agencies and elected officials. When significant change is needed, comprehensive, community based urban planning is a much stronger tool for promoting the creation of affordable housing while distributing it fairly, in appropriate locations, and with sufficient infrastructure.
- (3) ELURP would not require mandatory inclusionary housing under current law (no rezoning does although it has been administration policy in the last 10 years to require affordable housing) and it is not clear that the charter amendments would require that. It would destroy any semblance of rational development patterns and urban planning that was left after City of Yes and the 2014 MIH/ZQA amendments by making it much easier for developers to spot upzone any and every lot indiscriminately throughout the city, possibly for 100% market rate housing. Local elected officials would no longer be able to negotiate concessions to benefit the public, leaving only an appointed city planning commission dominated by the mayor to make all such decisions on behalf of communities and the city. It certainly wouldn't change the unequal distribution of affordable housing production where districts with uniformly low density zoning have vastly underproduced affordable housing compared to those with mostly high density zoning such as Community Board 9 Brooklyn. We have many areas of low density housing which were unaccountably zoned for high densities in the 1960's, and unlike other similar neighborhoods, we have not been allowed to preserve our existing neighborhoods even as we continue to build large amounts of housing and affordable housing.

- (4) Oppose appeals board: Currently the power to reverse a city council disapproval already resides with the Mayor through his veto power over the city council. Since the Mayor effectively controls the city planning commission by making the majority of appointments, a new appeals board is unnecessary for this purpose. The power to veto council modifications is extremely troubling. Like ELURP and Fast Track, it seeks to remove the council's and the local communities voice – but in ALL rezoning applications since the board can veto any council modifications or disapproval it wishes. What would be the point of having the full council vote on rezoning applications at all?

Moreover, in supposedly seeking to end the practice of “member deference” to individual council members, it replaces that with deference to ONE individual council member – the Speaker, and one borough president. What is to stop the Speaker and one borough president from blocking the city council from imposing deeper or greater affordability requirements than what the City Planning commission has requested? Adding the public advocate and comptroller as members of this appeals board hardly helps democratize this body. The public advocate already appoints a member of the city planning commission, perhaps the comptroller should as well. The borough presidents can exert greater influence on the land use process by leveraging the voices of the community boards rather than casting themselves as a lone voice in opposition to their boards. This can be done, as we suggested, by having the borough board vote on individual ULURP applications, by appointing community board members to vote on the city planning commission on a rotating basis, and by giving planning assistance to community boards to create pro active comprehensive plans.

Comments: Dear members of the New York City Charter Revision Commission, As Executive Director of The New Majority NYC and a former mayoral candidate for New York City, we write to encourage this commission not to recommend a switch to nonpartisan open primaries with top-two general elections. We are leaders working on voting rights, gender and racial justice issues. Our partners and our communities are succeeding with ranked choice voting as it is currently used. A top-two general election would undermine a system that is working and hand more power to outside interests who want to influence our elections. The top-two system limits choices for voters and gives wealthier candidates and special interest groups more power to influence our elections. Narrowing the field to just two choices means that campaigns and dark money groups know exactly which candidate to target, and can flood the airwaves with negative messaging. For example, Georgia's Senate runoff elections in 2020 attracted over $500 million in ad spending. This has an immediate eroding impact on local organizing power in response to money raised, particularly organizing power of historically underserved communities. One of us has run for mayor of New York while the other works with female candidates to represent the city. We have witnessed first-hand the benefits of running in a diverse and competitive pool of candidates. Campaigns should be about the needs of all people, not just the wealthiest or most politically connected. It is critical that our elections system supports, not hampers, the incentives for all candidates to focus on the needs of all New Yorkers. The top-two non-partisan open primaries can limit the ability of independent and minor party candidates to face voters in the general election. Our city has a rich history of successful independent and minor party candidates and we should preserve those pathways, not undermine them. Candidates fighting for our communities tend to do better in positive, issue-oriented campaigns that emphasize direct voter contact. Those are the exact campaigns incentivized by ranked choice voting, as we saw in this year's primary elections. Ranked choice voting has delivered New York City's first majority women and most diverse city council ever. A top-two system would relegate ranked choice voting to the first round only, which would limit its positive impact and limit representative power for New Yorkers. We strongly encourage this commission not to recommend nonpartisan open primaries for New York City. Instead, we offer two other reform suggestions that would maximize the positive benefits we get from ranked choice voting. First, a semi-open primary would allow independent voters to participate in the party primary of their choice. This would meet the Commission's goal of increasing participation and including the over 1 million unaffiliated voters in New York City. A semi-open primary would achieve this without undermining independent candidates, minor-party candidates, and ranked choice voting. Second, expanding ranked choice voting to the general election would give voters meaningful choices, instead of limiting to just two, while also ensuring we elect majority winners. Dear members of the New York City Charter Revision Commission,

As Executive Director of The New Majority NYC and a former mayoral candidate for New York City, we write to encourage this commission not to recommend a switch to nonpartisan open primaries with top-two general elections.

We are leaders working on voting rights, gender and racial justice issues. Our partners and our communities are succeeding with ranked choice voting as it is currently used. A top-two general election would undermine a system that is working and hand more power to outside interests who want to influence our elections.

The top-two system limits choices for voters and gives wealthier candidates and special interest groups more power to influence our elections. Narrowing the field to just two choices means that campaigns and dark money groups know exactly which candidate to target, and can flood the airwaves with negative messaging. For example, Georgia's Senate runoff elections in 2020 attracted over \$500 million in ad spending. This has an immediate eroding impact on local organizing power in response to money raised, particularly organizing power of historically underserved communities.

One of us has run for mayor of New York while the other works with female candidates to represent the city. We have witnessed first-hand the benefits of running in a diverse and competitive pool of candidates. Campaigns should be about the needs of all people, not just the wealthiest or most politically connected. It is critical that our elections system supports, not hampers, the incentives for all candidates to focus on the needs of all New Yorkers.

The top-two non-partisan open primaries can limit the ability of independent and minor party candidates to face voters in the general election. Our city has a rich history of successful independent and minor party candidates and we should preserve those pathways, not undermine them.

Candidates fighting for our communities tend to do better in positive, issue-oriented campaigns that emphasize direct voter contact. Those are the exact campaigns incentivized by ranked choice voting, as we saw in this year's primary elections. Ranked choice voting has delivered New York City's first majority women and most diverse city council ever. A top-two system would relegate ranked choice voting to the first round only, which would limit its positive impact and limit representative power for New Yorkers.

We strongly encourage this commission not to recommend nonpartisan open primaries for New York City. Instead, we offer two other reform suggestions that would maximize the positive benefits we get from ranked choice voting.

- First, a semi-open primary would allow independent voters to participate in the party primary of their choice. This would meet the Commission's goal of increasing participation and including the over 1 million unaffiliated voters in New York City. A semi-open primary would achieve this without undermining independent candidates, minor-party candidates, and ranked choice voting.

- Second, expanding ranked choice voting to the general election would give voters meaningful choices, instead of limiting to just two, while also ensuring we elect majority winners.

Thank you,

Ebonie Simpson

Hello, It's vital that we dispel the myth that jungle primaries are a panacea for low voter turnout. The data from states that have adopted them clearly indicates they have not increased participation. If the commission's primary objective is to get more people to the polls, then we must shift our focus to strategies that have a demonstrated positive effect, rather than clinging to a failed premise. California's decade-long experience with jungle primaries since 2012 provides compelling evidence. Their own turnout data shows that voter participation has stayed almost exactly the same when compared to the previous 12 years, for both primaries and general elections. This consistent stagnation is a strong indicator that jungle primaries are not a solution to low voter turnout, and we should instead focus on active, direct engagement with voters.

Hey,

Understanding true impact is key to effective voter turnout reform. We know with certainty that jungle primaries do not increase participation; their record is one of consistent underperformance. The proven pathway to higher turnout is the adoption of even-year primaries. Beyond this, the most significant impact on voter engagement comes from people's organizations, including community groups, unions, and political parties. These are the entities that excel at direct, personal voter contact, utilizing methods like canvassing and personalized outreach that numerous studies confirm are highly effective. Any attempt to diminish the strength or curtail the self-determination of these organized entities, especially political parties and labor unions, will inevitably depress turnout. Such initiatives appear to be an agenda to disempower organized advocacy rather than a sincere effort to expand the electorate. Our goal must be to strengthen the framework that allows these vital organizations to robustly participate and turn out voters.

Sincerely,
Kayla Miller

Comments: See attached testimony. Testimony in Opposition to Expedited ULURP in Low-Density Areas Submitted by: James Delaney Date: July 15, 2025 Location: Bellerose, Queens, NY Thank you for the opportunity to speak. I am a long time resident of Bellerose, Queens, and an active participant in civic affairs and neighborhood preservation. I strongly oppose the proposal to expedite the Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) in low-density areas. This proposal undermines the very principles of community engagement and transparency that ULURP was designed to uphold. Low-density neighborhoods like mine are not just zoning designations—they are living communities with unique histories, infrastructure limitations, and deeply rooted civic institutions. Accelerating the review process risks sidelining the voices of residents and community boards who are best positioned to evaluate the local impacts of proposed developments. Key Concerns: • Loss of Community Oversight: Expedited ULURP would reduce the time available for Community Boards and Borough Presidents to review and respond to proposals. This diminishes meaningful public input and weakens the checks and balances that protect neighborhood character. • Infrastructure Strain: Many low-density areas, including parts of Eastern Queens, already face challenges with sewer capacity, school overcrowding, and limited public transit. Fast-tracking development without thorough environmental and infrastructure review and input from local community residents could exacerbate these issues. • Precedent for Overdevelopment: By creating a “junior review” for “junior changes,” the proposal opens the door to incremental upzoning that could permanently alter the scale and livability of low-density neighborhoods. • Equity and Fairness: Streamlining ULURP for modestly sized projects may seem efficient, but it disproportionately benefits developers while reducing protections for communities. The cost and uncertainty of ULURP are not flaws— they are safeguards against unchecked development. Owners in low-density areas made “the most expensive investments of their lives” with the faith in zoning and the expectation of an ongoing way of living. Recommendations: • Preserve the full ULURP timeline for all zoning changes in low-density districts. • Require robust environmental and infrastructure assessments before any fast-track designation is granted. • Ensure that Community Boards retain full authority to review and comment on all land use proposals, regardless of size or location. In closing, I urge the City Planning Commission and the Charter Revision Commission to reject any proposal that weakens ULURP in low-density areas. Our neighborhoods deserve thoughtful planning, not rushed approvals. Thank you. James Delaney

To Whom It May Concern,

The recent election in Alaska, with its historically low turnout, should be a wake-up call. It is a clear indication that jungle primaries are not the answer to low voter participation. This is not an isolated incident but part of a larger pattern that we have seen in other states as well. The data is telling us a story, and we need to listen. It is time to move beyond the debate over jungle primaries and start a new conversation about the real drivers of voter engagement.

Testimony in Opposition to Expedited ULURP in Low-Density Areas

Submitted by: James Delaney

Location: Bellerose, Queens, NY

Thank you for the opportunity to speak.

I am a long time resident of Bellerose, Queens, and an active participant in civic affairs and neighborhood preservation. I strongly oppose the proposal to expedite the Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) in low-density areas.

This proposal undermines the very principles of community engagement and transparency that ULURP was designed to uphold. Low-density neighborhoods like mine are not just zoning designations—they are living communities with unique histories, infrastructure limitations, and deeply rooted civic institutions. Accelerating the review process risks sidelining the voices of residents and community boards who are best positioned to evaluate the local impacts of proposed developments.

Key Concerns:

- Loss of Community Oversight: Expedited ULURP would reduce the time available for Community Boards and Borough Presidents to review and respond to proposals. This diminishes meaningful public input and weakens the checks and balances that protect neighborhood character.
- Infrastructure Strain: Many low-density areas, including parts of Eastern Queens, already face challenges with sewer capacity, school overcrowding, and limited public transit. Fast-tracking development without thorough environmental and infrastructure review and input from local community residents could exacerbate these issues.
- Precedent for Overdevelopment: By creating a “junior review” for “junior changes,” the proposal opens the door to incremental upzoning that could permanently alter the scale and livability of low-density neighborhoods.
- Equity and Fairness: Streamlining ULURP for modestly sized projects may seem efficient, but it disproportionately benefits developers while reducing protections for communities. The cost and uncertainty of ULURP are not flaws—they are safeguards against unchecked development. Owners in low-density areas made “the most expensive investments of their lives” with the faith in zoning and the expectation of an ongoing way of living.

Recommendations:

- Preserve the full ULURP timeline for all zoning changes in low-density districts.
- Require robust environmental and infrastructure assessments before any fast-track designation is granted.
- Ensure that Community Boards retain full authority to review and comment on all land use proposals, regardless of size or location.

In closing, I urge the City Planning Commission and the Charter Revision Commission to reject any proposal that weakens ULURP in low-density areas. Our neighborhoods deserve thoughtful planning, not rushed approvals.

Thank you.

Hello,

We face a clear choice: pursue ineffective gimmicks or invest in proven strategies for voter turnout. Jungle primaries are a failed concept. The evidence points toward even-year primaries as a successful structural change. Beyond that, the lifeblood of voter engagement comes from organized entities like labor unions and political parties. Their direct contact efforts are the gold standard for mobilization. Any policy designed to hamper these groups would directly suppress voter participation. Let's make the right choice and support the grassroots infrastructure that truly engages the electorate.

Testimony in Opposition to the Proposed NYC Land Use Appeals Board

Submitted by: Sylvia Delaney Date: July 15, 2025

Community Affiliation: Bellerose Commonwealth Civic Association

Thank you for the opportunity to testify.

I strongly oppose the establishment of the proposed NYC Land Use Appeals Board. While the intent to streamline or democratize the land use process may be well-meaning, the framework as currently proposed raises serious concerns about transparency, public oversight, and institutional integrity.

Concerns About Accountability and Transparency

- The creation of an additional appeals body introduces ambiguity around jurisdiction and decision-making authority.
- There is insufficient clarity on how board members would be selected, vetted, and held accountable.
- Without robust public input mechanisms, this board risks operating with diminished community representation.

Potential Undermining of Established Processes

- New York City's Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP), while not perfect, has built-in opportunities for community boards, borough presidents, and the City Council to weigh in.
- This proposed board could override or dilute the voices of community-level stakeholders who are closest to the impact of land use decisions.

Risk of Politicization and Overconcentration of Power

- Land use decisions affect neighborhoods deeply—physically, culturally, and economically. A central appeals body risks privileging political expediency over local nuance.
- The proposal lacks guardrails to prevent conflicts of interest and political influence, particularly in high-stakes rezoning applications.

Call for Strengthening Existing Structures Instead

- Rather than layering another board on top of an already complex system, we should invest in fortifying community boards and enhancing ULURP engagement.

- This could include expanded training for board members, better public education on land use issues, and ensuring timely access to environmental and economic impact studies.

In closing, I respectfully urge this body to reject the proposed NYC Land Use Appeals Board and instead focus on deepening transparency and empowering community-level review in our land use processes. Thank you.

Testimony Before the New York City Charter Revision Commission

Re: Opposition to the Implementation of a "Jungle Primary" System

Delivered by: Lurie Daniel Favors, Executive Director, Center for Law and Social Justice at Medgar Evers College

Good Day Commissioners,

Thank you for the opportunity to present written testimony on this very important matter. My name is Lurie Daniel Favors and I am the executive director at the Center for Law and Social Justice at Medgar Evers College (CLSJ). I am writing to express strong opposition to the proposed adoption of a so-called “jungle primary”<sup>1</sup> or “open primary” system for New York City elections.

About CLSJ

The Center for Law and Social Justice (CLSJ) is a unit of Medgar Evers College of The City University of New York. Founded in 1986 by means of a New York State legislative grant, the mission of CLSJ is to provide quality advocacy, conduct research, and advocacy training services to people of African descent and the disenfranchised. CLSJ seeks to accomplish its mission by conducting research, and initiating public policy advocacy projects and litigation which promote civil and human rights, and national and international understanding on behalf of community organizations and groups of people of African descent and the disenfranchised. Because of its unique combination of advocacy services from a community-based perspective, CLSJ is a focal point for progressive activity.

From its initial days, CLSJ has worked to defend the voting rights of Black New Yorkers and other racial “minority” New Yorkers. To this end, CLSJ has led or co-led many historic voting rights advocacy initiatives in New York City including but not limited to: the New Majority for Charter Change (1987-1989) which successfully advocated for voting rights provisions and other equitable initiatives to be included in the new NYC Charter; the Majority Coalition for Fair Redistricting (1991-1992) which worked to ensure fair redistricting for people of color in NYC. CLSJ is also a founding member of the New York Voting Rights Consortium (1993-present) a coalition of leading local and national voting rights organizations advocating for the protection of voters of color in the New York metropolitan area. The voting rights litigation that CLSJ has been involved in include Ashe v. Board of Elections, Chin v. Bd. of Elections, Rodriguez v. Pataki and Hayden v. Pataki, among others.

Opposition to “Open” Primaries

Under an open primary – or top-two system – all candidates, regardless of party affiliation, compete in a single primary election. Out of that contest, the top two vote-getters advance to the general election. At first glance, this approach seems neutral and may be appealing to many. The reality, however, is that an open primary system, introduced in this matter and with such little community preparation and education, threatens to diminish and dilute the voices of communities of color, particularly Black voters. Furthermore, incorporating an open primary system at this time, would further serve to undermine our city's democratic values and destabilize Black voter participation.

First: Open primaries can dilute the power of organized political communities. For decades Black New Yorkers worked to build political power by engaging in deep organizing with political parties. The current closed primary system allows communities with shared values and interests to select candidates who reflect their shared priorities. An open primary, by contrast, allows a fragmented and crowded field to split the vote, potentially locking out the very communities that have fought so hard to win representation.

This would not be the first time for a negative outcome like this to manifest after the introduction of an open primary system. In states like California and Washington, where top-two primaries have been implemented, communities of color often find themselves with no candidate of choice on the general election ballot. When multiple candidates from one community run, they can split the vote and be eliminated—even if their community constitutes a majority of voters in that district.

It is also quite curious – in the most negative of senses – that this commission would seek to weaken Political Party power in elections by introducing the specter of open primaries, now that Black voters and other voters of color have become increasingly the base of the Democratic Party in New York City and across the country.

Open primaries would also add countless “unaffiliated” voters – people who opt out of the primary election system – by allowing them to suddenly participate in partisan primaries. That too will dilute the influence of Black voters in New York. It should also be noted that any effort to diminish Black voters’ influence in local elections will also trigger pre-clearance with New York’s essential John Lewis Voting Rights Act.

Second: Too much change; too little preparation. Adding open primaries – after NYC just embraced rank choice voting – would essentially add another new and confusing process that upends the way we do elections again. As noted more fully infra, New York City just began incorporating rank choice voting within the past four years. As an organization dedicated to voter outreach and education, it has been an uphill battle to ensure that New Yorkers from our communities have the education they need in order to meaningfully engage with the ballot under this new system. New Yorkers need time to get used to one reform before having additional, unnecessary reforms forced into the electoral space.

Third: Open primaries suppress participation, particularly among working-class and low-income voters. Research shows that turnout in nonpartisan primaries tends to be lower, especially among voters who are not engaged in high-information elections or who rely on party affiliation as a key tool for understanding candidate platforms. This creates barriers to participation that disproportionately impact Black, brown, immigrant, and young voters—those who already face structural challenges to voting and representation.

Fourth: Open primaries is a solution in search of a problem. As noted supra, New York City recently made a major change to its electoral system when it adopted ranked-choice voting (RCV), which was approved by a wide margin of voters in a citywide referendum. RCV allows voters to express more nuanced preferences and promotes more inclusive campaigning. Instead of undermining that recently implemented reform, we should give it time to work and expand civic education around it—especially in underrepresented communities.

Fifth: Open primaries in NYC at this time would favor wealthy candidates and voters to the detriment of working class and poor NYC residents. Implementing an open primary would roll back progress by once again concentrating political power in the hands of wealthy candidates who can self-finance, reduce ideological diversity, and silence grassroots voices that have historically used party primaries to organize for change.

Wealthy New Yorkers already dominate political and economic life and play an outsized role therein. The party primaries are one of the few places where poor, working class and historically marginalized voters can even the score. This proposal to do away with primaries is an attempt to once again tilt the field in the direction of the wealthy and well-known. Open primaries make it easier for the uber rich to buy the seats and politicians they want – instead of political parties choosing their candidates, any candidate can just choose their political party and use outside money to achieve an electoral victory, to the detriment of poor, working class and voters who are otherwise kept out of the mainstream.

A better way forward: If this commission is serious about empowering votes, Commissioners should strongly consider consolidating elections so that they take place in even-years. We currently have a system that asks voters to come to the polls roughly every 5.5 to 7 months between multiple primaries and the general election. At least by consolidating elections to even years, voters would have time to understand how their votes shape New York City outcomes and would be able to more meaningfully engage with the civic process.

I urge this Commission to reject any proposals to move New York City to an open primary system. Let's protect and strengthen the hard-earned gains toward political inclusion, not erase them.

Thank you.

Dear Commissioners,

Primaries are held for a reason - for voters of a particular party to vote on the candidate they want to represent them. It gives them a chance to have spirited debates about the direction of their party. Non-partisan or jungle primaries will encourage well-funded spoiler candidates to muddle this important process. Non-partisan candidates are welcome to run as independents in the general election, but the primaries are not for them. It is a process between the political parties and their voters. Please do not change these rules.

Sincerely,

Zachary Boger

Dear Charter Revision Commission,

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the 2025 Charter Revisions.

I'm a current Brooklyn resident and I'd like to express support for all proposals 1-6.

Proposal 1 to fast track affordable housing seems like an important and sensible decision.

Proposals 2-3 also would help the development of housing in NYC by streamlining the process and forming more representative decision making.

Proposal 4 to modernize the city map is a must have. The fact that NYC uses collections of paper maps, let alone doesn't have a consolidated city map, is incomprehensible. The expected time and cost savings from this proposed digital map make its implementation paramount.

Proposal 5 is an easy and efficient way to increase voter turnout.

Proposal 6 is also a great idea because the current primary rules prevent participation from New Yorkers outside of major parties.

Overall I'm happy to see these ideas and believe that all 6 should be on the upcoming November ballot.

Thank you for your time.

Attention Commissioners,

I am deeply skeptical of any push for jungle primaries, and the data supports this caution. These reforms are consistently unpopular. Look at the failure of ballot measures in six states just last year: Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota. This is not an isolated event; it's a trend. Voters understand the stabilizing role that political parties play. This commission should acknowledge this reality and drop the subject. For a real impact on voter engagement, we should be looking at proven methods like even-year elections, not unpopular experiments.

Thanks,

Comments: I write to express my deep opposition to replacing NYC's primary system with jungle primaries. New Yorkers recognize this proposal for what it is: an attempt to sideline the political parties that allow many thousands of us to participate robustly in the process. This proposal seems to mainly be favored by a minority of moneyed interests who are unhappy with the outcome of this particular primary season. However, this outcome was entirely due to the strength of the winning candidate and the weakness of the opponent. Those unhappy with the outcome should work to find better candidates, not to foist an unpopular jungle primary system on us which we rejected 20 years ago, and which was also rejected in 6 of 6 states where it was on the ballot last year.

Comments: I think that an open primary should be on the ballot in the Fall. It is consequential that our elections produce outcomes that are representative of the electorate, and by limiting the primary elections we are excluding younger/minority voters who do not register with a specific party. In addition to the expanded access, it would allow voters to support candidates from any party, and then thoughtfully choose between the two front runners in the general election.

Dear Charter Commission Members

Political parties give people a framework for organizing around shared ideas and beliefs and effectively competing for political power. This organized approach is vital because, in its absence, the political arena becomes dominated by individual wealth, charisma, or media presence, rather than the collective will of the people. The party label—(D), (R), (C), or (WFP)—is a shorthand for a comprehensive set of values and policy positions, giving voters a quick and reliable way to understand candidates' stances on issues like social welfare or national security. Why dismantle the infrastructure that allows for broad-based participation and informed decision-making, tilting the scales towards money over genuine representation?

Further, top-2, run-off elections are NOT open primaries. Open primaries are when parties open their primaries to registered voters who are not enrolled in a party. This is the change we should be making, not a 2-winners-take-all pre-election that reduces our choices in the main general election.

Thank you,
Diana Finch

Comments: Dear Commissioners, My name is Roberta Barnett and I live in Manhattan. I am a member of a community board where we discussed and submitted testimony, though I speak only for myself here. After reflecting on hours of public input related to the Charter Revision Commission's reports, I wanted to voice my support for questions 1-4. Our City is experiencing crisis levels of housing vacancy and affordability, and your action on these measures could make a real difference. The questions before you will help unlock the types of housing and infrastructure that would benefit neighborhoods across the City, all while preserving public review and accountability. I support the first ballot question proposed by the commission that would create a new fast track process for affordable housing. I appreciate that this question would balance community board review with offering 100% affordable projects an easier path to development. As a member of the public who has spent the better part of a decade attending meetings and hearings on affordable housing projects, I look forward to having fewer meetings to attend per project. Having fewer meetings per project means that members of the public will better know how to focus their efforts and will save volunteers and concerned residents time. I am also supportive of providing the City's fair housing framework with an enforcement mechanism. When communities like mine build new housing, residents are often frustrated that the benefits are slow to materialize and worry that scarce City resources will not be allocated to meet the growing need. If we can be assured that the benefits and burdens of new development are somewhat equitably shared, we can more quickly chip away at our housing supply crisis across neighborhoods while building stronger support for further development in communities that are building today. I support the second ballot question creating an expedited land use review procedure for smaller residential projects, acquisitions, dispositions, map changes, and minor infrastructure and resiliency projects. This expedited process provides a predictable and less-costly approval process that preserves community board review. These are the types of projects we want to see in our community, and it is in our best interest to give them an easier path to completion. Much like with the first ballot question, I also am supportive of fewer meetings per project in order to save members of the public time having to appear before additional bodies for smaller projects. Furthermore, a shorter timeline between proposal and construction will help improve perceived ownership over public decisionmaking, as elected officials, volunteers, and members of the public will be more quickly able to see the results of their public engagement. For decades, ULURP has provided a predictable and standardized process for land use changes, and I look forward to ELURP providing the same, only scaled down to match the size of those changes. I support the third ballot question creating a ULURP Appeals Board consisting of the Mayor, City Council Speaker, and relevant borough president as the final say on land use decisions. Councilmember deference has been an incredibly powerful tool for preventing new housing from being proposed- let alone built- sacrificing local desires above the City's needs. This change would allow for projects to be proposed and considered holistically and would prevent one individual from blocking badly-needed new housing. I support the fourth ballot question that would modernize and centralize the administration of the City Map. I am particularly excited about the potential for a digital City Map that could help members of the public and volunteers like myself better understand current topography and zoning when changes are being proposed. In addition to supporting the Commission's land use-related changes, I am supportive of the fifth ballot question moving elections to even years in order to increase voter turnout and save money. I am not supportive of the sixth ballot question creating open primaries, and I hope the Commission does not vote to put the question before voters in November. Thank you for your time and consideration. I hope that you will support the first four ballot questions as proposed. Best, Roberta Barnett

Comments: Dear Commissioners, My name is Roberta Barnett and I live in Manhattan. I am a member of a community board where we discussed and submitted testimony, though I speak only for myself here. After reflecting on hours of public input related to the Charter Revision Commission's reports, I wanted to voice my support for questions 1-4. Our City is experiencing crisis levels of housing vacancy and affordability, and your action on these measures could make a real difference. The questions before you will help unlock the types of housing and infrastructure that would benefit neighborhoods across the City, all while preserving public review and accountability. I support the first ballot question proposed by the commission that would create a new fast track process for affordable housing. I appreciate that this question would balance community board review with offering 100% affordable projects an easier path to development. As a member of the public who has spent the better part of a decade attending meetings and hearings on affordable housing projects, I look forward to having fewer meetings to attend per project. Having fewer meetings per project means that members of the public will better know how to focus their efforts and will save volunteers and concerned residents time. I am also supportive of providing the City's fair housing framework with an enforcement mechanism. When communities like mine build new housing, residents are often frustrated that the benefits are slow to materialize and worry that scarce City resources will not be allocated to meet the growing need. If we can be assured that the benefits and burdens of new development are somewhat equitably shared, we can more quickly chip away at our housing supply crisis across neighborhoods while building stronger support for further development in communities that are building today. I support the second ballot question creating an expedited land use review procedure for smaller residential projects, acquisitions, dispositions, map changes, and minor infrastructure and resiliency projects. This expedited process provides a predictable and less-costly approval process that preserves community board review. These are the types of projects we want to see in our community, and it is in our best interest to give them an easier path to completion. Much like with the first ballot question, I also am supportive of fewer meetings per project in order to save members of the public time having to appear before additional bodies for smaller projects. Furthermore, a shorter timeline between proposal and construction will help improve perceived ownership over public decisionmaking, as elected officials, volunteers, and members of the public will be more quickly able to see the results of their public engagement. For decades, ULURP has provided a predictable and standardized process for land use changes, and I look forward to ELURP providing the same, only scaled down to match the size of those changes. I support the third ballot question creating a ULURP Appeals Board consisting of the Mayor, City Council Speaker, and relevant borough president as the final say on land use decisions. Councilmember deference has been an incredibly powerful tool for preventing new housing from being proposed- let alone built- sacrificing local desires above the City's needs. This change would allow for projects to be proposed and considered holistically and would prevent one individual from blocking badly-needed new housing. I support the fourth ballot question that would modernize and centralize the administration of the City Map. To Whom It May Concern,

A strong party system provides the competition of ideas that is essential for a healthy democracy. Parties are forced to develop and articulate comprehensive platforms that address the country's major challenges. This process of platform-building and public debate helps to educate voters and clarify the stakes of an election. A political landscape composed solely of independent actors would lack this coherence, resulting in a more fragmented and personality-driven discourse. Parties provide the structure needed for a substantive, issue-based debate, which is fundamental to informed self-governance.

Sincerely,

Malcolm Sacks

TESTIMONY FOR THE NEW YORK CITY CHARTER REVISION COMMISSION July 15, 2025

Dear Chairperson Richard R. Buery Jr. and Members of the Charter Revision Commission,

I write to you as the District Manager of Queens Community Board 5, on behalf of our Community Board. The following matters are of special importance regarding the Charter Revision Commission Interim Report, dated July 1, 2025:

Question 1: Fast Tracking Affordable Housing

This section states that "By creating a broader, shorter and simplified action, the Fast Track Zoning Action would allow more affordable housing developments to obtain relief through BSA". Within this Question 1, as stated on page 7 of this Interim Report, the following provision is essential: "To receive a zoning waiver, an applicant would need to demonstrate that an eligible project is consistent with neighborhood character." The importance of not overwhelming communities with buildings that are considerably larger than the existing housing cannot be underestimated. Another critical provision on page 7 of this section states: "Once an application is filed, the BSA would be required immediately to refer a Fast Track application to the affected Community Board, where it would have a 60-day review, just as it does today."

Regarding ULURP, page 8 states: "this procedure would include the same 60-day opportunity for Community Board review as exists under ULURP today." This provision is critical, so that community input is maintained, considering that Community Boards consistently conduct public hearings regarding applications to the Board of Standards and Appeals and the City Planning Commission.

A concern is that "to speed review, the Borough President's advisory review period would run concurrently with the Community Board. Following the Community Board and Borough President, the City Planning Commission would have 30 days to review an eligible application and hold a final vote." This provision seems overly strict and would limit the ability of the Community Board to advocate their position with the Borough President. It would also put extensive pressure on the City Planning Commission to make too quick a decision. What if the City Planning Commission receives an extensive number of proposals in a short period of time? The same is true for the BSA.

QUEENS COMMUNITY BOARD 5

TESTIMONY FOR THE NEW YORK CITY CHARTER REVISION COMMISSION

Question 2: Simplify Review of Modest Housing and Infrastructure Projects

On page 9 the proposed provision: "Modest housing proposals that increase residential capacity by no more than 30% or allow housing with a standard height no taller than 45 feet." While this seems reasonable in some lower density districts, in a community of primarily 2-story one and 2-family homes, allowing a 45-foot-tall building could allow double the density.

Summary

It is essential to preserve neighborhood character with any housing applications. People purchased homes in lower density communities because they do not want to be in overly crowded conditions. This is especially true in the outer boroughs and for families.

It is also important to respect the views of the local council members regarding proposed developments in the communities they represent.

Your attention to these issues is needed and appreciated.

Sincerely,

Testimony of Brad Lander, New York City Comptroller & 2025 Democratic Primary Mayoral Candidate

Mayor Eric Adams 2025 Charter Revision Commission
Monday, July 7th 2025, 5:00 PM – 8:00 PM
Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture

Good evening and thank you for the opportunity to testify. I'd like to thank Chair Richard Buery, Vice Chair Sharon Greenberger, Secretary Leila Bozorg, the Commissioners, and Alec Schierenbeck and the Commission staff for convening this hearing.

I come to you just days after the 2025 Democratic primary for Mayor, in which I was, as you know, a candidate. My testimony this evening is formed strongly by that race, in two key ways.

First, from beginning to end, I focused aggressively on housing affordability, which has been the work of my whole career. And so did all of the other candidates. New Yorkers are desperate for homes they can afford.

So I'm proud to be here tonight to strongly support Proposals 1 through 4.

Second, while the June election did not go exactly as I had mapped it out, I'm proud of the campaign I ran. I ran as a Democrat, in the Democratic Primary. I lost fair and square. I'm grateful to have been part of a history-making race that saw the highest turnout in a local primary election since 1989.

A diverse electorate of nearly one million New Yorkers showed up. 556,000 voted for Zohran Mamdani, who I proudly cross-endorsed—just like Ranked Choice Voting was meant to encourage. And many of those voters had never cast a ballot in a primary before; indeed, registration surged in the final days before the deadline.

We thoughtfully debated serious ideas about what sort of message and approach the Democratic Party candidate should put forward in November, to govern our beloved city going forward.

I lost. Andrew Cuomo lost. Zohran Mamdani won, and he will be the Democratic nominee for Mayor in November. That's democracy, as we have long practiced it here. But now, it appears that some billionaires who didn't get their way want to change the rules.

So I'm also here this evening to strongly urge this Commission to leave its proposal to eliminate party primaries – like the one we literally just had – off the ballot.

Taking a step back: I'll admit, when this 2025 Charter Revision Commission was announced, I was skeptical—and for good reason. I took Mayor Adams at his word when he launched the 2024 Charter Revision Commission, with a stated mission to strengthen the City's fiscal framework and bring greater transparency to the budgeting process. I offered serious recommendations in good faith. But that Commission twisted one of my recommendations into a misleading proposal, threw it together with other drivel, and trivialized the Charter Revision process. So I approached this year's Commission with skepticism.

I'm thrilled to admit that you've proven me wrong. This Commission has taken its mandate seriously. As you were tasked, you have put forward a bold vision for inclusive growth that could make a real difference in tackling our city's housing crisis. The housing and land use proposals are the most significant we've seen since the 1989 Charter Commission.

I'm proud to support Proposals 1–4. They offer a real opportunity to build a broad coalition for the inclusive growth we need to fix the housing shortage. These proposals aren't just about building more homes—they help address long-standing issues around fair housing and equity.

By modernizing how the City plans for its future, and by aligning capital investments with community needs, we can take a more strategic, thoughtful approach to tackling the infrastructure challenges in our neighborhoods—like climate resiliency, access to good jobs, open space, as well as strengthening and preserving the cultural and community institutions that people treasure. These proposals move us closer to the kind of comprehensive, long-term planning I've been fighting to bring to New York City for years. Together, Proposals 1–4 offer a path toward building the city of neighborhoods that people love, and can afford to call home.

Let's be clear: getting these proposals approved by voters won't be easy. As we've seen with City of Yes, the Commission will have to do the hard work of listening and building trust—especially in the outer boroughs—to get this across the finish line.

That's why it's exciting that there is a broad potential coalition for inclusive housing growth—not just to support Proposals 1–4, but to work together in the coming years to put them to work.

I think it's significant that when asked by The New York Times for one thing about which he had changed his mind, Democratic Nominee for Mayor Mamdani spoke about private sector, mixed-market housing growth. At this moment, we have the potential for a truly broad coalition for the inclusive housing growth we need to build a genuinely affordable city.

That was the mission assigned to this Charter Revision Commission, and you are on the cusp of accomplishing it. However, if you also place on the ballot a proposal to do away with partisan primaries, just days after such an inspiring partisan primary, I fear you will undermine your mission badly.

Proposal 5 is a good one. There's no denying that even year elections will help boost turnout.

But tossing in a proposal that would end party primaries, of the sort that New Yorkers have utilized for generations, and upend how we run elections—just weeks after a historic race that folks across the country have been watching as a part of the larger debate about the direction forward for the Democratic Party—is a mistake.

This is only the second citywide cycle using Ranked Choice Voting, and it's working: it's boosting turnout, encouraging coalition-building, and giving voters more voice.

Supporters of top-two primaries claim they'll boost turnout, but the data doesn't back that up. In addition, given that 40% of Democratic primary voters in New York City are Black, the top-two primary proposal under consideration risks diluting Black political power in direct violation of the Voting Rights Act.

Worse, whatever the reality—and I don't doubt the motivations of the members of this Commission—coming when it does, it will be seen as a craven attempt to undermine the results of this election and claw power back into the hands of people like those who funded Andrew Cuomo's SuperPAC.

This is an important point: party primaries have their issues, to be sure. Political parties are not pristine institutions, and I've spent a lot of my career fighting them. But if you eliminate party primaries—in which candidates, community organizations, labor unions, political clubs, and other civic groups have an opportunity to shape parties' platform and approach—you won't, sadly, wind up with some kind of Athenian democratic nirvana, in which each every individual will conduct their own deep research. You'll wind up with a political landscape ripe for being dominated by moneyed interests, who can spend unlimited sums in an effort to shape the field.

There are other appropriate changes that could be made at the State level to boost access and turnout without eliminating party primaries. For example, I would support an effort to allow people to change their party registrations a good deal closer to the election, rather than in February, long before people are paying attention.

Finally, I worry that proposing to rewrite the election rules now risks undermining this Commission's serious effort to tackle the city's affordability crisis. While there are many other aspects of City government that you might have sought to address – procurement delays, fiscal stability, the CCRB, civil service reform, corruption – you were given a clear and urgent mission. You've done a great job by focusing on that mission: the proposals you've put forward on housing and land use amount to some of the most thoughtful and promising reforms we've seen in decades. I urge you to stay focused on this urgent mission, and not jeopardize it.

Thank you again for the opportunity to testify this evening.

Dear Commissioners,

I am writing to add my voice to the opposition against jungle primaries. This reform has been tested, and it has been rejected by the public. The results from last year's elections in six states—Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota—are a testament to its unpopularity. Voters clearly value the role that political parties play in our democracy. For this commission to advocate for such a system would be a mistake. I urge you to redirect your focus to proven, effective reforms like the implementation of even-year election cycles to boost voter engagement.

Hello,

I am writing to urge the commission to end any and all consideration of "jungle" primaries. This system is unpopular, and its track record is one of consistent rejection by voters. The failure of this measure in six states last year, including Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota, provides definitive proof. The public values the role of political parties in our democracy. This commission should respect that view and abandon this proposal. Let us instead focus on reforms that are known to work, like consolidating elections to even-numbered years.

To Whom It May Concern,

The argument for jungle primaries often hinges on the promise of increased voter turnout, a promise that has not been fulfilled. The data from Alaska is a recent and stark reminder of this reality. Their 2024 primary, held under a new open system, saw historically low participation. This outcome undermines the entire premise that this type of reform is a key driver of engagement. We must acknowledge this failure and pivot our focus toward strategies that have a real chance of success in bringing more citizens into the democratic process.

Commissioners,

I urge this commission to recognize the reality of public opinion on jungle primaries. It is a deeply unpopular reform. The evidence is recent and clear. Last year, it was on the ballot in six different states, and it failed in every single one. Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota voters all said no. This is a powerful, cross-partisan statement. It is time to listen to the people and abandon this idea. Let's work on proven solutions, like shifting local elections to even years, to make our democracy stronger.

Good afternoon,

I believe political parties play an important organizing function in our democracy, and I write in opposition to the proposal for open primaries. I believe this measure would make New York City elections less democratic and more susceptible to outsize influence from the wealthiest few. I ask that you allow parties to retain their historic role in our city and avoid making hasty changes in pursuit of unclear benefits.

Commissioners,

I urge you to reconsider the push for jungle primaries. This electoral system is not only unpopular but has been consistently rejected by voters who value the traditional role of parties in vetting candidates. The evidence is undeniable. Just last year, this exact proposal failed in six different states: Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota. This widespread dismissal sends a clear message. This body should focus its efforts on proven methods to increase voter engagement, like promoting even-year elections, rather than wasting resources on a system that the public has already turned down.

Hello Commissioners,

"Jungle Primaries" would not be a mere adjustment; it would fundamentally re-imagine our primary system, making our recent adoption of Ranked-Choice Voting redundant. We haven't even given RCV, approved in 2019, the opportunity to demonstrate its full potential or for voters to fully integrate it. This rapid succession of major electoral reforms is unsustainable. It will undoubtedly lead to voter fatigue and confusion. We need to allow our current system to establish itself first.

To whom it may concern from the Charter Revision Commission:

I'm writing as a New York City resident to express my opposition to the current proposal establishing an top-two open primary system for city elections.

A top-two open primary, otherwise known as a "jungle primary," will decrease voter participation by forcing voters to make a choice between two candidates, potentially of the same party, during the general election. This leaves voters without a meaningful choice.

It also disadvantages grassroots, community-backed candidates by making them compete in a massive primary field, which are often very expensive, and splits the vote making it harder for these candidates to break through.

A top-two open primary will discourage grassroots challengers from working-class, diverse communities from running for election. The goal of a primary election system should be to increase participation from voters and candidates from all walks of life, not to let billionaires buy our elections.

Arguments in favor of the proposal state that this primary system would increase voter participation in local elections, but the research presented by the Charter Revision Commission's own preliminary report contradicts that claim.

California's switch to an open primary top-two system actually saw a decrease in voter turnout for midterm and presidential primaries in that research. California has also seen consistently low primary turnout over the last decade, especially for communities of color.

Given this evidence, putting this "jungle primary" system to a vote on the November ballot without meaningful input from the public, especially without consideration for other forms of semi-open or open primary systems, is undemocratic at best.

I ask the Charter Revision Commission to reject this proposal and leave it off the November general election ballot until there is significant research into other primary systems with meaningful consideration and input from the general public.

Thank you.

Hello Commissioners,

If our goal is truly to improve voter turnout, then introducing "Jungle Primaries" after just implementing RCV is a step in the wrong direction. These increasingly complicated systems are not historically proven to boost participation. What does work is simplifying the process and making elections more predictable. Consolidating our elections to even-numbered years achieves this. Let's focus on practical, proven methods for engagement, rather than layering on more intricate, untested systems.

The link between the current push for jungle primaries and the past efforts of billionaires like Mike Bloomberg could not be clearer. It is a time-tested strategy for undermining organized labor. The goal is to create a political environment where unions cannot effectively challenge the agenda of the wealthy elite. This agenda includes privatizing public assets, cutting services, and suppressing wages. Recognizing this historical pattern is key to understanding the true threat this proposal represents and why it is so critical that we mobilize to defeat it.

Dear Commissioners,

The ongoing dialogue surrounding jungle primaries reveals a clear agenda to diminish the influence of working people. It is a consistent pattern that these proposals are championed by billionaires, who view strong labor unions as impediments to their objectives of privatizing public services and weakening government agencies. The commission examining this proposal notably lacks any representation from labor or working people, which is deeply troubling. As Josh Greenman detailed in Vital City, the actual aim is to limit labor's influence, not to genuinely increase voter turnout. The idea that American workers possess "outsized influence" in politics is a complete fantasy, given the profound economic disparities. The Democratic primary is one of the few places where the collective voice of working people can still challenge the overwhelming influence of money. This proposal directly threatens that crucial balance of power.

Hello, Please, this commission should not pursue jungle primaries. Voters have spoken loudly against them, consistently rejecting these reforms. They simply don't achieve their stated goals. When Mayor Bloomberg tried this in New York in 2003, it was dismissed by 70-30%. Last year, it failed in six more states: Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota. This consistent rejection, across the spectrum, shows that voters understand the value of political parties. Don't waste time and money on a proposition so clearly unpopular. Dear Members of the Charter Revision Commission,

I'm writing as a New Yorker who considers myself an independent thinker — someone who values fairness, competition, and a strong democracy. While I am a registered Democrat, I am at heart an unaffiliated voter. I registered as a Democrat to vote in the Democratic primary, but I have, at times, voted Republican or not at all. Yet, I have serious concerns about the proposal to adopt a top-two primary system in New York City.

This proposal is being rushed forward without meaningful engagement of voters like me. I understand and share the goal of improving turnout and participation, but this approach is the wrong way to achieve it. There are other proven methods to accomplish this, like expanded voter education, better community outreach, and reforms that increase trust and transparency. These methods address voter turnout in general, not only that of the unaffiliated voters. But none of these solutions have been explored in this process.

Additionally, there are other types of systems to include unaffiliated voters in primaries that are better suited for New York City. For example, an election system that preserves party primaries but allows unaffiliated voters to choose a party ballot on primary day is one that New York City should look into. This is not being explored.

Changing the way we vote is not something to rush. It demands thoughtful, transparent deliberation with real community input. Democracy is too important to get wrong. Pushing through a complex change like this, with limited public understanding or support, risks further disengaging voters, especially in communities of color and groups that aren't politically engaged. Then, once this proposal is on the ballot, as has happened in other states, New Yorkers will be bombarded with misinformation and disinformation that will discourage some from voting on the proposal. The result will be a high ballot drop-off rate on the question, and in even fewer people determining the outcome of this important and impactful change. It is not prudent that our election system be changed in this manner.

Given the potential impact of this proposal, I would like to ask you not to move forward with this proposal and instead initiate a more inclusive dialogue. Let's explore alternative solutions that can strengthen our democracy and increase voter participation in New York City.

Thank you for taking the time to consider my concerns. I appreciate your dedication to serving the people of New York City.

To whom it may concern,

I want to state for the record my opposition to jungle primaries. Jungle primaries are a solution to a problem that doesn't exist. There is absolutely nothing stopping existing competing major party members, third party registrants or unaffiliated voters from participating in our primary system as it stands. If a member truly identifies with the professed values and goals of a party, they are able to register with that party. Additionally, if they do not happen to share the Party's values and goals, but would like the party to support candidates that are more aligned with their own, the process to support candidates and vote in the primaries is easily-accessible. To allow those wholly unaligned with a party to influence their candidates is undemocratic and antithetical to the will of voters and should be prohibited.

This is not a reform that enjoys public support. Quite the opposite. Last year, voters in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota all had the chance to approve it, and they all declined. This widespread rejection is a powerful signal that the public values the role of political parties in the electoral process. This commission should take that signal to heart and abandon this proposal. Your energy would be better spent on proven strategies like even-year elections.

Warmly,

Attention Commissioners,

The proposed shift to jungle primaries is a transparent maneuver by the wealthy to diminish the political power of labor. This has been a consistent objective of billionaires, from Mike Bloomberg's past efforts to current advocacy. Their aim is to clear the path for widespread privatization of public services, such as education, and to weaken essential government agencies. The current commission, notably lacking any representation from labor unions or working people, reveals a clear bias towards powerful financial interests. Josh Greenman's insights in Vital City confirmed the real motivation: to limit labor's influence, not to enhance voter turnout. The idea that American workers, after decades of struggling against corporate dominance, possess "outsized influence" is absurd. The Democratic primary is one of the few remaining avenues for collective action to counter the power of the elite. This proposal threatens to eliminate that crucial counterbalance.

Hello,

The argument that non-partisan elections or "jungle primaries" create more choice often falls short when considering their impact on voter turnout. The reality is, almost half of all voters whose Party doesn't have a candidate in an election choose to sit out. This clearly indicates that voters rely on parties to present viable options that align with their values. When this clarity is absent, engagement drops. Such systems, far from increasing choice, can actually eliminate choice for voters by making it exceedingly difficult to identify a candidate who truly represents their core beliefs, leading to disengagement rather than empowerment.

Hey,

Why would we consider making our new Ranked-Choice Voting system obsolete before its impact can even be measured? "Jungle Primaries" would not be a minor tweak; it's a complete rewrite of our primary elections that would invalidate the will of voters who approved RCV in 2019. This move would send a message that electoral reforms are fleeting experiments, eroding trust in the democratic process itself. We need to demonstrate a commitment to the systems we implement, allowing them time to take root rather than constantly digging them up.

Hey,

This initiative to implement jungle primaries is a clear tactic by billionaires to undermine the power of organized labor. Such systems make it easier for financial influence to dictate electoral outcomes, rather than allowing political parties to represent and nominate candidates from their base. This directly threatens the ability of labor unions to advocate against the privatization of public services and against policies that weaken government agencies. The argument that "public sector unions" and other "interest groups" have an outsized influence is a false narrative designed to justify this power grab. Wealthy individuals already hold disproportionate sway in political and economic life.<sup>2</sup> The Democratic Party primary is a crucial avenue for working people to balance this influence. This proposal aims to further tilt the field towards those with significant financial resources.

Dear NYC Charter Revision Commission:

On behalf of nearly 220 families of the 89th Street Tenants Unidos Association, we are expressing deep concern with the current proposal about jungle primaries among those who prioritize the well-being of working people. This represents a direct assault on the labor movement, which has diligently fought for every right and benefit currently enjoyed. The billionaires advancing this initiative understand their objective perfectly: they seek to dismantle unions to facilitate the privatization of public services without opposition.

The lack of any labor voice on this commission is unacceptable. Josh Greenman's analysis was accurate – this is about reducing labor's power, not about increasing turnout. For decades, the scales have been tipped against American workers. The Democratic primary offers a rare opportunity to rebalance that power. This proposal, which seeks to further entrench the dominance of the wealthy, must be opposed.

Commissioners,

A common-sense approach to increasing voter turnout begins with proven strategies. It is empirically evident that jungle primaries do not succeed in boosting participation. A far more effective and data-backed reform is the implementation of even-year primaries. Moreover, the foundational role played by labor, community, and political organizations in driving turnout is undeniable. These groups are uniquely positioned to engage voters directly, using methods like canvassing and personalized member outreach that countless studies confirm are highly successful. Any measure that aims to weaken the organizational capacity or the self-determination of these vital groups would inevitably result in lower turnout, not higher. Such proposals seem to prioritize weakening organized political power over genuinely expanding the electorate. If our true aim is to maximize participation, then supporting and strengthening these organized groups in their efforts to turn out voters is paramount.

Moving NYC Municipal elections to even years couldn't possibly be more misguided or counterproductive.

The notion outrageously and erroneously conflates gross turnout with actual participation by an engaged electorate.

Consider the number of offices and candidates with which voters must acquaint themselves in a peak even year:

Governor/Lt. Governor, State Controller, Attorney General, United States Senator, United States Representative in Congress, NY State Senator, NY State Assembly Member.

That's seven different contests to consider, before the possible addition of judgeships and, in primaries, party positions like judicial delegates State and County Committee members and District Leaders.

That already amounts to more federal and state issues and candidates than a reasonably well educated, well-read voter can be expected to fairly and thoroughly evaluate in one election cycle.

Now add city elections in the same year:

Mayor, City Controller, Public Advocate, Borough President, District Attorney (a state office often elected in odd years,) and City Council Members. That's six more sets of candidates, and a panoply of local issues added to the mix. And in a City Primary with Ranked Choice Voting added you'd be piling up a set of factors to be considered that would cross the eyes of a political science professor.

The results of this sensory overload for the average voter might still increase gross turnout, but it can't possibly help them make informed decisions and their attention to important down ballot contests will suffer greatly.

Want proof? Look at the results of the recent primary, Council District by Council District. You'll notice a tremendous drop off of total votes cast for the office that most closely represents neighborhood voters compared with those for Citywide Offices. Indeed, you'll find that many cast votes only for Mayor.

Pile City elections on top of State and Federal and you'll certainly discover that, in terms of actual voter engagement, more is indeed less.

But wait! Is the goal really to save money by conducting fewer elections?

Don't count up those savings yet. To run the more complicated combined Federal/State/Municipal elections would likely require the Board of Elections to hire many more personnel:

Clerks to manage the long lines of waiting voters caused by the extended time each will take in the privacy booths considering and marking their multi-page ballots (such a primary will require at least three ballot sheets - I believe that two is the most that scanners have had to handle to date.)

Technicians to unjam the scanners clogged by those multi-page ballots.

Conclusions: Cost savings will not be as great as proponents will claim, and any increase in gross turnout will be at a gross sacrifice in participation by engaged voters.

Now, regarding Open Primaries:

Despite the bleating of voters who choose not to enroll in a party, no registered voter is excluded from voting in any primary election held in the district in which they reside.

Those who feel excluded merely have to pick a party whose candidates they wish to help choose and enroll in that party by the lawful deadline prior to the primary in which they wish to participate. They need not swear fealty to the public policy positions generally espoused by that party, nor to vote for that party's candidates, nor even to remain enrolled in that party after casting the particular vote(s) that impelled their enrollment. Indeed, they can change their party enrollment for each and every regularly scheduled election to vote to select a different party's candidates - as long as they do so by the lawfully established deadline.

Now, entreating the State Legislature to move that deadline somewhat closer to the date of the subject election, if successful, would add even more flexibility to party-hop by individuals who prefer to have no D or R or C or WFP, etc. on their voter registration, but that's not the demand. Proponents of open primaries want to be able to walk in on primary day and, with little or no prior consideration, put their stamp on a party's choice to compete in the general election.

As an enrollee of one of the major parties, though I don't always vote for all of that party's candidates in general elections, I resent the intrusion into the selection of "my" party's candidates by individuals who can't be troubled to pick which party they want to affect at least a reasonable time in advance. If keeping their voter registrations blank of party enrollment is so vitally important to them, they can wait to vote in the general election or circulate a petition to place a candidate of their own on the ballot as an "independent." Or they can move west to New Jersey or north to Massachusetts and vote in their open primaries, at the last minute, to their hearts' content.

Of course there are practical considerations that cause New York to remain one of the 13 states with closed primaries. Voters enrolled in a party whose candidates have been chosen by party leaders or unchallenged petitions could, in an open primary, actually attempt to sabotage the other party by voting for the candidate perceived as weakest against the already chosen candidate of the party to which they actually belong. An open primary would also force a candidate for a particular party's nomination to try to deliver their campaign message to the entire electorate - a highly expensive and daunting task at which the wealthiest candidates would have a great advantage. The present system allows skilled, principled candidates a fairer, more reasonable chance of attracting sufficient votes from among a party's enrolled voters to work their way onto the general election ballot.

With the substantial majority of New Yorkers content with this ultimately more democratic system, it would be folly to indulge the narcissism of those who demand a seat at the table at a "party" for which they refuse to be troubled to send a timely RSVP.

Thank you.

Hello,

The push for jungle primaries constitutes an attack on democratic processes, specifically designed to diminish the power of organized labor. This strategy originates from the ultra-wealthy, who seek to dictate the political landscape through financial means. They do not favor robust unions that advocate for fair compensation, benefits, and public services. Instead, they desire a system where their vast resources can effectively purchase political offices, circumventing the critical role of political parties in candidate selection. The assertion that workers' organizations possess "outsized influence" is a direct affront to decades of struggle by working Americans against immense corporate power. This initiative is about control, not progress, and it must be resisted.

Hello,

The argument for robust political parties is fundamentally an argument for organized, collective power over disorganized, individual influence. Parties provide the structure for diverse groups to coalesce around shared principles and advocate for them effectively. In their absence, our political system would become a free-for-all, dominated by charismatic personalities and wealthy benefactors rather than coherent ideologies. This would be a profound loss for representative democracy, which depends on the ability of ordinary citizens to band together and make their voices heard in a structured and sustainable way.

Commissioners,

I was born and raised in New York City and participated in nearly every primary election for which I was eligible.

I first became eligible to vote in 1982, and at that time, primary elections in New York City had not yet become as diverse as they are now in ways that give equal opportunity for residents in New York City to join a political party, volunteer, or otherwise become involved in grassroots attempt to qualify to run for political office.

New York's system allowed for anyone interested to become involved, the primary election system via which membership in a political party allowed regular New Yorkers to become familiar with electoral politics and become involved precinct by precinct and neighborhood by neighborhood.

There is a certain transparency in knowing which party a candidate is affiliated. Primaries in which no party affiliation is listed would tend to benefit those who want to hide their party affiliation and utilize access to political action committees and major donors to fund their campaigns.

Also, in New York City, be it wise or not, at times, power brokers like to run candidates with last names that sound like a candidate via name only. As an example, I reside in Washington Heights, where the majority of residents are Latinx, Dominican, Spanish speaking and tend to self-identify as heavily Democratic, liberal, and progressive.

In NYC, there is a clear demarcation between the politic of Democrats, Republicans, Independents, Working Family Party, etc. Many residents know what various parties represent and the policies they tend to embrace which may or may not align with a resident's views.

Embracing a system in which party affiliation is not listed is a less than transparent way for those who might beholden to interests that do not align with what New Yorkers tend to embrace by party affiliation.

In other words, from where I sit, the attempt to get rid of Party Designations is an attempt to disempower local political organizations that tend to know their neighborhoods and the interests of their local residents because party structures allow for residents to become involved at every level in a manner in which residents can align themselves with not only their own self-interests but larger interests that would tend to embrace solutions that a resident supports.

I encourage you to leave party designations associated with political candidates in place.

They provide both political clarity and grassroots established institutions by which residents can have their voice heard.

Kindly,

Tony (Anthony) Glover

Hello,

The decline in voter turnout is a complex issue, but one contributing factor is undoubtedly the weakening of party structures. Electoral systems that create a barrier between voters and a clear party choice contribute to disillusionment. For many, voting is an expression of partisan identity. When that identity is not reflected on the ballot, the motivation to participate wanes. Restoring the central role of parties in presenting clear, distinct choices is a crucial step toward re-engaging millions of voters who currently feel that the political system does not speak to them.

Bree Campbell

Attention Commissioners,

The idea of jungle primaries is simply not what voters want. These reforms consistently fail to achieve their stated goals and are routinely rejected by voters. Just look at last year's results: it was on the ballot in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota, and it failed in all six. This demonstrates that voters, across the political spectrum, understand the value of political parties. This commission should not waste our time and money on an unpopular proposition. If the goal is to increase voter turnout, stick with what is proven to work: even-year elections.

Sincerely,

Commissioners,

Jungle primaries do not increase voter turnout. They do not lead to a more engaged electorate. And they do not address the root causes of low voter participation. Why are we still talking about them? Let's move on to a more productive conversation about the real solutions to the problem of low voter turnout.

Hey,

I urge this commission to scrap any plans for jungle primaries. Voters have made their dislike clear, rejecting these reforms time and again. They are not effective. Last year, it was on the ballot in six states - Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota - and it failed in every single one. This is a clear signal that voters, across the political spectrum, understand the value of political parties. This commission should not waste our time and money on an unpopular proposition. Hello,

We often hear criticisms of political parties, but let's be realistic: they are an integral part of how voters make sense of a complex political world. The party affiliation listed next to a candidate's name—(D), (R), (C), or (WFP)—is an incredibly efficient way for voters to infer a candidate's position on a wide range of issues, from environmental regulations to immigration reform. This is not about blind allegiance; it's about practical decision-making. Removing this vital signal would force every voter to become a political pundit, meticulously researching every individual candidate's specific platform, which is an unrealistic expectation. This would inevitably lead to reduced voter engagement and a less informed electorate, proving that parties, despite their flaws, are essential for widespread participation.

Sincerely,

Michael Schwab

Attention Commissioners,

The Democratic primary is a critical battleground where working families can challenge the dominance of corporate wealth in politics. The jungle primary proposal is a calculated attempt to disarm working people in that fight, leaving the field open for candidates bankrolled by the rich and powerful. It strips away the power of collective endorsement and replaces it with the brute force of massive campaign spending. This would effectively end the primary as a meaningful democratic exercise and turn it into a coronation for the candidate with the most money.

Thank you,

Dear Commissioners,

Political parties function as essential filters in our democratic process. They sift through potential candidates, identify viable contenders, and present them to the public under a banner of shared values. This filtering process is vital for preventing the ballot from being flooded with an overwhelming number of candidates, many of whom may lack serious intent or a coherent platform. By structuring the competition, parties make the act of voting more manageable and meaningful for the average citizen. Without this function, our elections would be far more chaotic and less decisive.

Best,

Jack MacCarthy

Hello,

Voters have made it loud and clear: we do not like jungle primaries. These reforms are ineffective and are routinely rejected. Mayor Bloomberg's attempt in New York in 2003 was dismissed 70-30%. Last year, it failed in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and South Dakota. This widespread rejection shows voters' appreciation for political parties. This commission should not waste time and money on an unpopular proposition. If the aim is to increase turnout, stick with proven methods like even-year elections.

Commissioners,

The very concept of jungle primaries is designed to benefit candidates with significant financial backing, often at the expense of those with strong community ties or labor support. This method dilutes the power of political parties to select candidates accountable to their base, instead allowing external money to dictate who advances to the general election. This poses a direct threat to municipal labor unions, which are pivotal in defending public services against privatization. The absence of any labor voice on the commission is a critical oversight. The assertion that "public sector unions" have "outsized influence" is a narrative frequently used to justify efforts to weaken collective bargaining. The wealthy already exert immense control over our political and economic life.<sup>3</sup> The Democratic primary is a vital space for working people to unify and push for their interests. This proposal aims to undermine that essential mechanism.

Thanks,

Charlotte Bush

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through just to win an election, is a pointless and political power grab by Eric Adams. There has already been a primary and switching to yet another primary is naked political maneuvering. It is a waste of city time, energy and funds. Comments: I voted in my first primary this election year, because RCV finally made me believe my vote could matter. Throwing out RCV in favor of a jungle primary would be so discouraging to voters like me who would see that only the well-established and well-known politicians would have a chance to win in the primary. It would become equal to the "voting for the lesser evil" scenarios we see play out on a national level. RCV is great for democracy and it would be a great loss for NYC to do away with such a progressive and innovative voting system that finally empowers New Yorkers to get out and vote for the candidate they believe in most. NYC voter turnout is finally on the rise in just 2 cycles of RCV. Please do not push us backwards. Thank you, Sarah

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to reject Eric Adam's proposal to switch New York to a "jungle primary." The mayor is clearly trying to force this through without public consent, despite overwhelming support for ranked choice voting. It's a personal vendetta that will diminish the voices of New Yorkers, depress turnout in elections, and is a transparent and depressing power-grab by our deeply embarrassing and embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate and sad. Voters chose the current system. Please respect the will of the people of New York and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you so much for your time.

Comments: I'm writing today as an "unaffiliated" voter against the current open primary, top-two election reform proposal. As it is currently proposed, it comes across as a negative comment on the results of the most recent democratic Mayoral primary and the concept of RCV. Both of which had record breaking turn-out from the demographic you want to stimulate. Now is not the time to make changes that are going to come off as cynical and partisan. And this proposal is not as researched as it should be, since it doesn't address either voter turn out (as Oscar Pocasangre, a senior data analyst and political scientist, testifies - there isn't evidence that this approach increases turnout) or providing more voter choice (since in the general election it would actually reduce the number of candidates). The real problem isn't being addressed. The two major parties aren't engaging the voters. Independent voters aren't part of the primaries because they either disagree with the platforms of the parties or don't have confidence in establishment leadership in listening to their concerns. Members deciding to ignore the vote of their party and running "independently" makes a mockery of the primary process. As does the fact that the other parties didn't even have primaries. Why is the city paying for these private groups to have their internal nomination process at all? What we need is a better, more transparent, egalitarian (stripped of dark money) method of putting candidates on the general ballot and then RCV in that election. Please continue to research our city's options for increasing access to the ballot and increasing voter turn out. I urge you against putting this proposal on the ballot this year. Continue to refine it for another year.

This change, which the mayor is trying to force through without public consent, will decrease youth voter turnout, and ensure that only "party establishment" candidates can win elections. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system just because Eric Adams can't take no for an answer. Please respect the people's voice and leave our primaries as they are. Name: Seth Borden

[REDACTED]

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, I am a resident of Manhattan's Hell's Kitchen neighborhood and am a member of Manhattan Community Board 5 as well as chair of its State Licenses and Permits Committee. I am not expressing the opinion of CB5 or the committee, but am rather expressing my personal opinion. I strongly support Proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 for the reasons I outline below. ----- I find Proposals 1-4 to be thoughtful and effective in starting to tackle the affordable housing crisis, which I think needs to be urgently prioritized: Proposal 1 would make it easier and faster to produce affordable housing, taking a helpful step toward resolving the intolerable current situation in which deeply affordable housing projects are put through bureaucratic hoops that increase costs without meaningfully improving outcomes. The fact that it has origins in proposals by organizations I respect, such as ANHD, bolster my support. Proposal 2, implementing ELURP, is a fantastic idea that prevents time being wasted on small rezonings that add housing, protect against flooding, and create open space. The sum impact of enabling these small changes citywide has the potential to make a meaningful difference.

Proposal 3 is sorely needed to help resolve a problem other residents and I are seriously concerned about: that the current process does not account for boroughwide and citywide needs, allowing too many good projects to be blocked, particularly in wealthy neighborhoods which are more able to block housing they don't want, hurting the city as a whole. Proposal 3's new Appeals Board would ensure that development decisions reflect borough-wide and citywide considerations. On Proposal 4, I was frankly surprised to find that a unified City Map is not already in place, and think the one outlined in the proposal is a step in the right direction, improving processes to drive down costs without negative impact. ----- Proposals 5 and 6 would make New York City's democracy stronger: Proposal 5 addresses an issue I have been confounded by since I arrived here and adopted New York as my home: that we choose to spend more money and guarantee lower voter turnout by having local elections in odd years. In a city with vibrant politics and where we have already pioneered excellent reforms such as the implementation of ranked-choice voting, I have always found this unacceptable. Moving local elections to even years would save the city money and dramatically increase turnout, improving our democracy. Proposal 6 would mean primary elections would produce candidates who match the preferences of a broader swathe of New Yorkers, rather than partisans who turn out in primary elections. I am a proud Democrat, but do find it problematic that anyone who is not is essentially shut out of elections by not being able to vote in the only election that currently matters in most years: the Democratic primary. I congratulate the Commission members on their excellent work in putting together these measures, and ask that they put all six on the November ballot. Sincerely, Seth Borden

Comments: Hello, I am writing to please urge you to reject Eric Adams' proposal to get rid of Ranked Choice Voting for upcoming elections. The removal of something like this should be voted on via public ballot, and Eric Adams is avoiding that because he knows that the people of New York City would vote to keep it. Ranked Choice Voting allows for everyone's vote to truly count, and removing it would dampen the voices of black and brown people who are already subject to so many voter suppression tactics. Ranked Choice Voting was used without issue in the democratic mayoral primary, and it is not a coincidence that Adams is trying to do away with it after a candidate he does not like won by a large majority. There is no reason to do away with this system, and any changes to the way people can vote should be voted on by the people. Thank you, Lydia Rumowicz

Comments: I am writing to express my opposition to a mayor-launched charter revision commission, mere months before he is voted out of office. Mayor Adams has no mandate to alter the policies and governing documents of this city, and in particular an attempt to undo ranked choice voting and negate the gains in cooperative campaigning our representatives have made would be nakedly anti-democratic.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Julian

Our mayor is trying to force through this change without public assent. It will silence New Yorkers who are already systematically ignored and, and depress youth turnout. It is also clearly a last-ditch power-grab. I urge you to respect the will of the people and leave our primary system alone. Thank you, Zall Hirschstein

Comments: Good evening, As a New Yorker and CUNY student who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. It's clear that the only reason the mayor is requesting this change is because he and the democratic establishment were embarrassed by the recent election results. He is behaving like a child who knocks over the table after losing a game of monopoly. And his childish, vindictive actions will have bad consequences for the state of democracy in our city. Thank you for taking the time to read my comment. Sincerely, Terra E

Comments: Subject: Oppose the "Jungle Primary" Proposal Hello, As a New Yorker who believes in fair elections and real democracy, I urge you to reject Mayor Eric Adams' proposal to implement a so-called "jungle primary" system in New York City. This proposed change — being pushed without meaningful public input — threatens to silence the voices of Black and Brown communities, reduce youth voter turnout, and consolidate political power in the hands of one individual. This is a reckless attempt by an embattled mayor to reshape our electoral system for his own gain. Our city deserves better. Please stand with the people of New York and preserve our current primary system. Thank you, Elizabeth Ortiz

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Caleb

Comments: I love closed primaries featuring Ranked Choice Voting. I believe that the latest RCV for democratic primary was a great way to show off the will of Democratic voters in NYC, and changing it would be a betrayal of constituents' right to choose.

Comments: Mayor Eric Adams' latest bid to wrestle Ranked-Choice Voting away from New York City voters reeks of political opportunism: a puzzling move from a man who once rode waves of reform only to pivot faster than a gyro-spinning hot dog stand when the political winds shift. Critics see a MAGA-style flip-flop worthy of auditioning for The Apprentice—especially given his cozying up to Trump, including a White House sit-down right after a DOJ investigation mysteriously evaporated under a Trump-appointed prosecutor regime. It's almost as if Adams sniffed the scent of a presidential pardon, realized Trump likes him better than Biden, and decided his own voters were collateral damage in a self-serving power grab. Tearing up voter choice in the name of "my re-election," not democracy? That's less policy, more parody—and oh-so-entertaining for political satirists.

Comments: Protect Rank Choice Voting, the mechanism that helped elect Eric Adams should not be erased in order to boost him over a victorious DSA candidate. Mamdani won fair and square because he's honest, he's got a track record for caring about what average New Yorkers feel and think and because he has a troop of young people who believe in their capacity to build a better future free from phobias and foreign fascism. This is our New York. New Yorkers must be heard.

Comments: Dear members of the commission, I am a Manhattan resident, and I am writing to urge you to reject Mayor Eric Adams's proposal to alter the New York City primary election system. Our current Ranked-Choice Voting system is a far more democratic system than Adams's proposed "jungle primary," which is clearly intended as a power-grab following a primary election whose results Adams dislikes. But that primary was a successful demonstration of the democratic potential of RCV, which allows for people to choose their preferred candidates without fearing that they will "waste" a vote. Please preserve this important advance for democracy in the city. Thank you. Andrew Goldstone [REDACTED]

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, will depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power grab by our embattled mayor. Comments: Please do NOT change New York City election primaries from the current ranked choice system (which we have only been able to use for one year) to a "jungle primary," in which only the top two vote getters (from either party) go against each other in the actual election. Ranked choice voting produced very interesting results this year, and should be used for at least three or four more years to get a solid idea of how it has changed voting and whether it should be kept. Changing to a "jungle primary" with zero public discussion and consideration is simply wrong, no matter who suggests it. -Richard Leigh

It allows me to vote for who I want without having to think about who has the best chance to win. It is a huge success, in my opinion. It's easy too, and has made me pay more attention to elections. Comments: Open Primaries The Commission has stated that it continues to consider whether the City's "closed" primary system should end. Right now only registered Democrats can vote for Democrat candidates in the Democratic Primary Elections. And registered Republicans can only vote for Republican candidates in the Republican Primary Election. The proposed reform under consideration would be to create an all-candidate, all-voter contest, where the top two candidates would compete at the general election. What about Rank Choice Voting? Wouldn't that have to be appealed? I mean we've only had RCV twice. But for the Commission to not even present anything regarding RCV makes it harder to give an intelligent comment. All I can say is, it's an issue worthy of debate that can't be properly addressed in this forum at the present time.

Comments: The people voted overwhelmingly for Ranked Choice Voting. Surely when the people chose so overwhelming for a policy their will should not be overturned so easily. Not that the politics are the most important part of this debate, but things did not go well for those that overruled the will of the people to allow Michael Bloomberg and that one cohort of Council members to get a third term and no one else. When is the last time Christine Quinn was considered a viable candidate for any office. Before that vote she was the heir apparent to the Mayoralty.

Comments: To the Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing as a New Yorker deeply committed to democratic representation and fair elections. I urge you to reject the proposal to eliminate ranked choice voting and replace it with a so-called "jungle primary." This proposed change would undermine political representation in our city, particularly for communities of color and younger voters, who have benefited from ranked choice voting's ability to amplify diverse voices and reduce vote-splitting. Ranked choice voting has empowered more candidates to run and win outside of traditional power structures—it is precisely this democratic openness that this proposal threatens. The move to a nonpartisan "top-two" primary system would concentrate power in ways that reduce voter choice and weaken the ability of communities to elect candidates who represent their interests. There is no compelling evidence that voters want this change, nor that it would improve our elections. Instead, it appears designed to consolidate political power at the expense of grassroots democracy. I urge you to respect the will of the electorate who adopted ranked choice voting and to reject any backdoor attempt to reverse that decision. Sincerely, Kristia Watkins

Comments: I'm writing because it's my understanding that the mayor's office is supporting a measure to replace our ranked-choice voting system with open primaries. I am completely against this decision. We recently saw ranked-choice voting work to great effect in a primary that saw record turnout. This proposed alternative would keep the chaos of tons of candidates but without the coordination and cooperation between like-minded campaigns that helped build political movements instead of unite voters.

Comments: As a 35-year New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I am writing to urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL for a "jungle primary" for NYC. No! This change, which the mayor is obviously trying to slip through without the public knowing or consenting, will handicap the voices of New Yorkers of color, decrease youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Tim Murphy (Ridgewood Queens 11385)

Comments: I strongly oppose switching NYC to a jungle primary system. This proposal undermines core democratic principles by potentially silencing minority voices and reducing meaningful choice for voters. Our current primary system ensures all parties can present their candidates and platforms to the electorate, protecting the fundamental right of political association. A jungle primary would concentrate power among well-funded candidates while diminishing representation for diverse communities. Liberal democracy requires robust party competition and clear ideological choices. I urge the Commission to preserve our current electoral system that protects both majority rule and minority rights.

Comments: DO NOT get rid of ranked choice voting. Ranked choice voting is a very clear and fair way to choose a mayor that benefits every constituent in the five boroughs. Eric Adams is AFRAID. He cannot be permitted to find yet another way for New Yorkers voices to not be heard & in turn for him to be benefited. Do not get rid of ranked choice voting. KEEP RANKED CHOICE VOTING.

Comments: In regards to the questions posed by 2025 New York City Charter Revision Commission Releases Interim Report with Potential Housing, Election Reforms as a resident of the city of New York Bronx County (City Island) I say NO to all three questions posed. Stop trying to serve special interests by providing "developer work arounds" that would fail to preserve character and communities. We said no to the city of Yes." And we are saying no to special developers interest that provide work around. No means No. Serve the people not developers, not big money.

Comments: For the love of all that is holy, NYC needs to maintain rank choice voting. Voters approved it. Period. End of. A mayor that has lost favor with the voters trying to end rank choice is the epitome of hubris. NYC democrats want Mamdani. And we need to see the end runs for what they are. Not what the voters want. Not democracy. But an unpopular mayoral candidate trying to save his own ass. Nope. Nope. Nope.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Margaret S. Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who believes that the recent mayoral primary was a democratic success, I am writing to urge you to reject Mayor Adams' proposal to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." The mayor is trying to force this change through without public consent. It is a bad idea — it will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers and depress youth turnout in our elections. It appears to be the actions of a sore loser for whom the current system didn't provide the outcome he desired. New York City cannot and should not upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Hannah

Comments: Hello, I am a New York resident who recently voted in the June local primary. Rank choice voting made me able to vote aligned with my values for a set of candidates I believed best aligned with what people wanted. Rank choice voting makes elections more fair and allows people to vote in their actual best interests instead of just for the "lesser of two evils". It instates more confidence for people in our voting system. I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a non-partisan, top-two, "jungle primary". It seems pretty clear that Adams is trying to force this through without giving the public time to understand and respond to this. New York City's election system is meant to support democracy, and giving every new yorker a chance to vote in their best interests. Getting rid of rank choice voting and partisan primaries would benefit Eric Adams but not the people of NYC. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Laura Ceng

I additionally want to note that ranked choice voting has resulted in much higher quality candidates and political coalitions within the NYC Democrats, rather than the same old winner-take-all methodologies that are so toxic to our local politics. Ranked choice voting is the present and is already enabling a better, brighter future for our city. I strongly encourage the commission to protect ranked choice voting. Thank you, Joseph Kohlmann

Comments: Please do not get rid of ranked-choice voting! It is so much better and fairer than a jungle primary. It transformed the campaign period into something with so much collaborative potential between candidates and we have no need of jungle primaries.

Comments: Dear members of the Charter Revision Commission, I'm a New Yorker who believes that free and fair elections are the bedrock of our democracy, and that local elections are where we as citizens have the best chance to make our voices heard. As such, I urge you to REJECT Eric Adams's proposal to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." Mayor Adams is clearly trying to push this unjust change through without public consent. This proposal will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers and depress youth turnout in our elections. We can't let our leaders destroy a system that works the second that it no longer serves them personally. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Carol Beach

Comments: As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to reject disgraced mayor Eric Adams's proposal to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." The mayor - whose corruption and general mismanagement of the city should have already disqualified him from continuing service - should not be able to force through such a change without public consent, especially when the change is so obviously contrary to the interests of thousands of New Yorkers like me who proudly voted in the Democratic Party primary this year. Is it a coincidence that Adams is pursuing this change after his own egregious and criminal behavior effectively barred him from running in a mainstream political party? This is, without a doubt, a cynical and shameless power-grab by our beleaguered mayor. New York City need not upend its election system simply because Eric Adams wishes to maintain his illegitimate grip on power. Please respect the will of New Yorkers like me and leave our primaries as they are.

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, is clearly a power grab. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Ranked choice primary systems are better in every way, especially for allowing a wide variety of voices and views to be heard. Do New York a favor and don't even consider this absurd proposal Thank you for your time, William Warren

Not only is this a blatant and self-serving move, it weakens NYC as a democracy and as a bastion of civil rights. The results of the elections were the will of the people of New York, and can and should never be nullified by a cowardly and grasping man.

Rank Choice Voting is a shining example of how we can have different voices represented and allows for true democracy in our city. We get more interesting candidates that represent the people through this process. Additionally, it allows for more people to get excited about the process. I urge this commission to reject Eric Adams' proposal to get rid of RCV. Thank you, Michelle de Vera

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of marginalized New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. His decision to do this only after he is dissatisfied with the results of this year's primary and to not bring it to the table when he won the 2020 by ranked choice voting and not raise his concerns when it could have been brought to the people on a 2024 ballot along with his other charter revisions is a transparent retaliation to the voice of the people. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you,

Comments: To the Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing as a New Yorker deeply committed to democratic representation and fair elections. I urge you to reject the proposal to eliminate ranked choice voting and replace it with a so-called "jungle primary." This proposed change would undermine political representation in our city, particularly for communities of color and younger voters, who have benefited from ranked choice voting's ability to amplify diverse voices and reduce vote-splitting. Ranked choice voting has empowered more candidates to run and win outside of traditional power structures—it is precisely this democratic openness that this proposal threatens. The move to a nonpartisan "top-two" primary system would concentrate power in ways that reduce voter choice and weaken the ability of communities to elect candidates who represent their interests. There is no compelling evidence that voters want this change, nor that it would improve our elections. Instead, it appears designed to consolidate political power at the expense of grassroots democracy. I urge you to respect the will of the electorate who adopted ranked choice voting and to reject any backdoor attempt to reverse that decision. Sincerely, Lily
from Brooklyn

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Daniel Hickman

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Ranked-choice voting has instilled a new hope in and engagement with the political system — the record turnout numbers from last month's primary speak for themselves. At a time of widespread civic disillusionment, overturning the historic achievement of RCV would not just be an affront to the voters (and candidates) it empowers in future elections, but would also be a flagrant violation of the 75% of voters who voted to adopt the system in 2019. I'm 18. I've been involved in local politics for several years now, and it is truly remarkable how much ranked-choice voting has revitalized the civic culture of this city. I am just one of so many young New Yorkers who have been inspired and galvanized by such a landmark democratic reform, a sentiment shared by New Yorkers of all ages. So please, I implore you, REJECT Eric Adams' anti-democratic proposal, and defend one of the greatest innovations in NYC elections in recent memory — and the overwhelming majority of New Yorkers in support of it. Thank you, Judah Firestone-Morrill

Comments: As a New Yorker and advocate for climate resilience, I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects - especially solar systems and battery energy storage. Climate change is already impacting our city with more extreme heat, flooding, and grid stress. To prepare for a safer, more affordable, and resilient future, New York must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood. That's why I support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably. I urge the Commission to ensure that clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized under any fast-track procedures and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review. Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight. Let's not let red tape stand in the way of climate action. Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process. Sincerely, Mali Zaken

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Christian Rutledge Brooklyn, NY

Comments: Hello, I am writing in regards to Eric Adams' proposal to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." In an effort to uphold true democracy and fair elections, I believe to approve this proposal would be a great disservice to many of our New York City residents. This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. This change could also lead to two candidates from the same party being the only choices on the general election ballot, which could leave many NYC Residents feeling they aren't properly represented by the general election candidates. I also worry that candidates will feel pressured to pander their responses to important issues in order to appear more appealing, only to change stances when in office. I firmly believe that if you were to change our primaries, you would be doing a great disservice the individuals who you promised to represent. I strongly urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a

"jungle primary." New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Megan Chase

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Christine Carey

Comments: To whom it may concern, I am writing to express my concern about the proposal to implement a "jungle primary." While I want to see more voices included in primary elections, I believe that Rank Choice Voting has been an incredibly successful initiative. It has fostered a better campaign environment and increased turnout. We cannot upend our political systems because they do not favor people attempting to hold on to their own power. Thank you for your consideration.

Comments: I have family in California where they have the jungle primary and it has been problematic there and I would not like to see it come here. I do applaud the efforts to bring in unaffiliated voters but there are other ways to do that without upending the whole party primary system. I worked as a poll worker for the first primary with RCV and voters needed a lot of education about it. This year voters were a bit more familiar but there is still a long way to go and the last thing we need is to change everything again. RCV is a great system and we are just starting to see the positive effects on politics in NYC, let that play out and do not change things now.

Comments: This is about Eric Adams' move to end Ranked Choice Voting. I completely disagree.
RCV makes elections more fair because it allows each voter's choices to be more fully expressed.
The Mayor needs to listen to the people -- not try a back door maneuver because he wasn't personally benefitted by RCV. Leave the system as it is. Alan Saly Sunset Park

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to reject Mayor Eric Adams' proposal to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change is being considered with needless haste without public consent. Switching our primary system will further silence the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections—all in the name of a power grab by a Mayor who has well earned New Yorkers' frustration and disapproval with his actions. New York City cannot afford to undemocratically upend its election system at one person's whim. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Louis Levy

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, - Sam

Comments: The trends show that 'affordable' isn't affordable. This Charter Revision, by removing the City Council's ability to vote down rezonings, will just continue the 30-year trend of working-class New Yorkers being pushed out. The issue isn't slow approvals — it's that what's getting approved doesn't actually meet the needs of working-class and low-income New Yorkers. Without real affordability protections and anti-displacement measures, this revision won't solve the crisis. It will accelerate gentrification and make things worse.

Comments: As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. Holding a jungle primary in June will insure that our top two candidates will likely be selected by a small sample of voters, which will limit the options for independent voters in the general election. They will double down on one of the worst qualities of our current electoral process, that our candidates for office get chosen by a small sample of voters instead fo the electorate as a whole. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Jungle primaries will harm democracy in New York. Sincerely, Tim Lewis

Comments: As a longtime New York City resident who is passionate about democracy and civic engagement, I urge the Charter Revision Commission to REJECT the proposal to adopt "jungle primaries" for our municipal elections. This change, which is being pushed through without much approval from or notice to the general public, will weaken the power of grassroots electoral campaigns in our city and further tilt the bias in our electoral system in favor of big money and the wealthy. I call on the Commission to respect the will of the voters and reject this proposal, which is clearly a desperate attempt by our incumbent mayor to remain in power.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to the old election process. This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will turn our city back to the politics of the past which are divisive and a free for fall. This is a clear power-grab by our Mayor who although benefitted from the system wants to allow future candidates that with big donors control our elections. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Andy

Comments: Dear Commissioners, I am a New York City resident and voter committed to protecting our democratic process. I strongly OPPOSE MAYOR ADAMS' ATTEMPT to impose "jungle primaries" on our city. This radical change, which is being rushed without meaningful public input and consensus, represents nothing more than a cynical maneuver by a Mayor under federal investigation to game the system in his favor. Our city deserves better than having its electoral system dismantled for one politician's survival. Please honor the voters' wishes and preserve our current primary system. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. Comments: As a New Yorker who supports fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change should not occur without public consent. It will empower the richest candidates, not the best candidates. It will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers and depress youth turnout in our elections. This is the opposite of democracy. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Tiffany James

Comments: To allow Eric Adams to eliminate ranked choice voting almost immediately after his weeks of vitriol against democratically nominated candidate zohran Mamdani is a level of cartoonish villainy even you lot shouldn't attempt. Please remember that, while the CIA also loves to overturn elections they don't like the results of, New York is neither the rest of America nor a Central American sovereign nation. You do not fuck with us. Warmly, Someone who's taxes pay your mortgage

Comments: I urge the Commission not to do away with closed primaries and RCV. RCV has made me a better-informed, more engaged civic participant, and brought out record numbers to the polls. I like that candidates have to listen to one another and stop treating politics like a game when in fact it's what dictates everyday New Yorkers' quality of life. And voters need to know the party of the person they're voting for. It just smacks of pettiness and betrayal that the charter would be changed at this juncture, in this context, when the people have spoken loud and clear that they need affordability and decency over corruption.

Comments: Hello, I am writing in opposition to Eric Adams' proposal to end ranked choice voting. We switched to RCV for good reason. Over the course of two election cycles, it's elected both centrist and more radical candidates, tracking voters' preferences - aka, exactly what a primary should do, and exactly why we switched to it in the first place. It would be unacceptable to keep cycling through different voting mechanisms in the hopes of guaranteeing a particular outcome, particularly in a moment like this when our democratic institutions are so fragile. Comments: As a New Yorker and advocate for climate resilience, I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects - especially solar systems and battery energy storage. Climate change is already impacting our city with more extreme heat, flooding, and grid stress. To prepare for a safer, more affordable, and resilient future, New York must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood. That's why I support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably. I urge the Commission to ensure that clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized under any fast-track procedures and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review. Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight. Let's not let red tape stand in the way of climate action. Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process. Sincerely, Paul Greenfield [REDACTED]

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Rosy Yeasmin

Comments: Hello, It has come to my attention that Mayor Adams wishes to replace ranked choice voting. This is a measure I absolutely cannot stand for. As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. I have never been prouder to vote in primaries than in NYC's RCV primaries. I firmly believe that they let the voices of the people truly shine and that this initiative intentionally squashes them. Don't give in to corruption and sore loser-ship[.]New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Becca Muffler

Comments: I'm writing to say how much I value the current ranked choice voting system, which is restricted to registered party members. I fear that the proposed revision to make our system an open primary would gravely undermine the democratic functioning of our city's electoral system. I therefore urge you not to adopt an open primary system.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. As a current Brooklyn resident, I'm writing to express my strong support for Proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 to make New York City more affordable and democratically representative. From 2010 to 2023, New York averaged about 22,000 new homes each year—less than a third of 1920s rates. With demand far outpacing supply, just 1.4% of apartments are vacant, rents are rising seven times faster than wages, and record numbers of our neighbors are sleeping in shelters or on the street. Though I hope to remain a New Yorker, the extent of the housing crisis here has prompted me to reconsider my commitment to staying in the city on several occasions. Proposals 1-4 will create some important pathways toward more housing and a more affordable New York for all. I strongly support Proposals 1-4 to fast track affordable housing, simplify review, strike a better balance in the land use process, and digitize the City Map. The city's housing shortage demands bold action. Proposal 1 would make it easier and faster to produce affordable housing, lowering costs and ensuring that all neighborhoods contribute to solving this crisis. This reform is long overdue and essential to reversing the tide of displacement. Proposal 2 would streamline the approval process for smaller rezonings that add housing, protect against flooding, and create open space. These are exactly the kinds of projects that should not be delayed by red tape, and this proposal would allow the city to respond more nimbly to urgent infrastructure and climate needs. The current system of member deference gives individual councilmembers outsized power to block citywide priorities. Proposal 3's new Appeals Board would ensure that development decisions reflect borough-wide and citywide considerations—not just the narrowest political interests. A unified City Map is a step in the right direction, since the current system can impose significant costs and time on infrastructure, housing, and other projects. Proposal 4's Digital City Map would allow processes that today take months or even years to occur nearly instantly. Proposal 5's motion to move local elections to even years would save the city money and dramatically increase turnout, especially among younger voters, working-class communities, and voters of color. This reform would help ensure that the voices shaping local government reflect the full population of our city. Sincerely, Nicole Martin Bedford-Stuyvesant 11238

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Naomi Vazquez

Comments: Hi, As a New Yorker concerned about democracy, I urge you to reject the Mayor's proposal to switch the city to jungle primaries. This change does not have the backing of the public. Ranked choice primaries work just fine! He himself got elected as a result. This corruption of democracy by our corrupt mayor must not be allowed. Thank you, Nathan Lamm

Comments: Please, in the name that is all that is fair and righteous, preserve rank choice voting in New York elections. Just because the mayor is desperate is no reason to adopt regressive election processes. Ranked choice voting is the fairest way to elect officials that NYrs want, without bias for incumbents or those with dark money corrupting the system. IVF anything, ranked choice voting should be expanded to all elections.

Comments: I'm writing in support of continued Ranked Choice Voting and against so-called "jungle primaries." Having lived in Los Angeles/California, I know how easy it can be for faceless dark money organizations to manipulate jungle primaries. I suspect this is why Eric Adams is advocating for it. Enough is enough. RCV is preferred by more than 70% of New Yorkers. Removing it risks damaging the legitimacy of our elections.

Comments: NYers fought for ranked choice voting and our elections. Jungle primaries would shift power towards candidates with significant financial resources or name recognition, making it more challenging for grassroots movements and candidates with limited funds to compete effectively. We want to live in a more democratic City, not a more Trumpian one.

Comments: Hello, I am writing to ask you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. The current party system with rank choice voting is a much more empowering system for voters to have more flexibility in their votes and encourages people to explore more candidates. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Jesus Cervantes

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to dismiss the proposal introduced by Eric Adams to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our disgraceful Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate to do so in an attempt to serve his interests and that of those who finance him. New York City just saw its most active primary for mayor, in which a record number of people casted votes. Please respect the will of the people, who voted with an overwhelming majority to introduce ranked choice voting, and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Karem Penalo

Comments: If the top two vote-getters proceed to the general election, open primaries would eliminate the ranked choice voting system, which New York voters now understand. Open primaries would diminish the power of Black and Brown voters, depress youth turnout, and undo the progress made by recent electoral reforms. This doesn't feel like progress. I'm also worried about the role of money in politics. Cuomo was the #2 vote getter in the last primary. Huge amounts of money were spent on his behalf and he parlayed name recognition to get votes even from people who hadn't had much opportunity to hear his policies, since he dodged election forums. Money has already perverted the electoral system.

Comments: I am a staunch proponent of ranked choice voting. This is an incredible tool for democracy in our city, and I'm not surprised, but disgusted, that Adams' establishment is trying to derail that process. That someone is losing their own political battle should not stop NYC from brining is strong political leaders.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing in enthusiastic support of all six proposals now under consideration. Collectively, they promise to ease our housing shortage and make New York City's democracy more inclusive. Proposals 1 & 2 Centering affordability and shortening the land-use approval timeline will spur construction—especially of smaller apartments that ULURP currently stifles. Proposal 3 By harmonizing local input with city-wide planning objectives, this measure will help ensure that new development benefits all New Yorkers. Proposal 4 Updating our land-use procedures is long overdue; this measure would streamline a system that has grown opaque and outdated. Proposal 5 Aligning election schedules will boost turnout and yield outcomes that better reflect the will of New Yorkers. Proposal 6 Allowing every voter to participate in primaries, regardless of party enrollment, will push candidates to appeal to a wider electorate and give all residents a real voice in choosing their representatives. Thank you for the chance to comment on the 2025 Charter revisions. I urge you to place all six measures on November's ballot so New Yorkers can decide on these vital reforms. Comments: I am a New York City land use law specialist and practitioner (over 35 years): a prior associate counsel at the Department of City Planning; and an adjunct clinical professor of law at NYU. I write today in my individual capacity, to focus the Commission's attention on the need for modifications to the Uniform Land Use Review Procedure as it affects the special permit process. THE ISSUE. A few weeks ago, I attended a City Council Zoning and Franchise subcommittee hearing. The council members asked excellent questions on the multi- site zonings. However, in addition to the rezonings, I sat through a schedule that included an application for four tables for an outside café sidewalk, and some other similarly micro-applicable matters. There were no questions. I thought about how we spend Council's time and government resources-- and make even small development proposals costly and uncertain. While many special permits from the past five years are sought in conjunction with a rezoning or text change applications, others are standalone applications. These include applications for parking waivers for a single building, allowing ground floor retail use, plaza design waivers, rear yard waivers, and adding a floor or two to an as-of-right warehouse. One must ask: is it efficient or necessary for a legislative body overseeing 8 1/2 million people and approximately 8.38 billion square feet of land in 51 council districts to have hearings on what is essentially a single storefront or some parking spaces? And moreover, a matter affecting less than a tenth of one block in one of the 51 community districts? Could this not be better decided by the City Planning Commission or Chair, based on the applicant meeting specific standards or conditions identified in the permit text? The proposals circulated to date address important affordable housing and other government issues in a thoughtful manner, seeking good government solutions. But why only housing and only a few of the ULURP actions? Economic development, efficiency, not-for-profit services, and good government generally is important to municipal growth and functioning, and a willingness of its citizens to make investments. Special permits affecting housing -- and also small businesses and development generally -- that are narrowly focused and apply micro-locally should not be tied up in years of review and face the uncertainty of a Council call-up. In the 1989 Charter revisions, it may have been intended or hoped that the "optional" city council call-up would mean that the Council would only call up projects that included issues affecting large areas or were of some City-wide interest. Instead, many are called-up for full review. THE PROPOSAL. Special permits which only affect a small area of land, and have no larger impacts should be exempted from a full ULURP review and end at City Planning, saving Council time and resources for matters that affect a larger area. Thus, special permits that are (1) for bulk waivers or solely ground floor use waivers (keeping the review for other "use" waivers); (2) that are not for "large scale development projects" as those are defined in the zoning resolution; and (3) do not trigger an environmental impact review (or EIS ), should not be subject to a seven-month process and full council review. They could go through the ELURP-type process; alternatively, Council call-up would not apply to the exempted applications, and the community and borough president review could be the collapsed 30-day period. The findings and conditions for those special permits have been vetted though a full review process for text changes, which are legislative; the individual special permit is to determine if the facts of the specific site and application meet the findings, which is administrative. The exempted special permits should be administratively decided, with finality at the Planning Commission, as is done in many other localities. Local review and advice through the 30-day community board review would be part of the process. I urge the Commission to consider expanding the proposal to exempt the special permits described above from the full process. Very truly yours, Carol E. Rosenthal

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Matthew Bambach

Comments: When I tell friends and relatives in other cities about NYC's voting policies, they're always so impressed and jealous, irrespective of their political opinions. It's one of the few shining examples we have left in this country of functioning democracy, please don't get rid of it just because it worked and gave the nomination to the most popular candidate. Closed primaries combined with RCV removes the idea of 'spoiler' candidates and allows people to actually vote their conscience instead of trying to pick a lesser evil. Without it, the voice of anyone who doesn't support the top two candidates is essentially ignored. It forces people into voting based on who they think *can* win instead of who they actually WANT to win. This isn't a form email, I'm writing truly and genuinely out of dismay at the idea that the city I love might so quickly reverse the progress made by electoral reforms just because the current mayor is a sore loser. Please, regardless of your opinions on any one candidate, respect the will of the people. Especially at a time when the federal government is doing its absolute best to dismantle democracy, let NYC stand firmly against that instead of capitulating.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports democracy and fair elections, I urge you to reject Eric Adams proposal to switch New York City from primaries with ranked choice voting to an open primary. This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent because he's upset with his losing trajectory, will deepen the distrust New Yorkers have in politics and elections and further depress turnout. Ranked choice voting didn't work out for Adams, but it works for us, the voters. No one is asking for this change, except a bruised Eric Adams claspig at straws. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Sami Sikanas

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Chris O'Brien

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I want to ensure that primaries continue to use Ranked Choice Voting. In 2019, New Yorkers voted for Ranked Choice Voting, and the support was clear with 74% of the vote being for ranked choice. Ranked Choice Voting up lifts the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, allows for lesser known mayoral candidates to get some votes, encourages cross-endorsement, and increases youth turnout in our elections. Please respect the will of the people vote from 2019, and whatever happens, keep Ranked Choice Voting intact. Thank you, [Your name]

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change is clearly designed to weaken the power of political groups that have opposed Eric Adams. Additionally, it will weaken the power of all political parties and reduce their ability to take action on behalf of their supporters, including the Democratic Party, of which Eric Adams is supposedly still a member. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Ryan Duggan

Comments: I am a New Yorker who supports and engages in true democracy and fair elections. I urge you to REJECT the PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Comments: I did not get to speak at the meeting in person or zoom. I wish to table these provisions because everyone was not able to speak at the meetings. I believe this charter commission should not submit anyone of the proposals because there was improper procedure and a rushed process to put this ballot measures this election. I believe there should not be open primaries because this would allow people with big money to dilute the vote of the voters by putting candidates on the ballot that may not intend on running or are celebrities to garner more votes and take them away from real accounts. The housing proposals are wrong and go around the community boards and limit input from the community for the sake of developing faster projects instead of what the community wants.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to reject Eric Adams' proposal to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because one man has decided he didn't like a particular electoral outcome. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Max Helfand

Comments: I am a Brooklyn resident concerned with the state of democracy. Democracy has been under attack across the country since the MAGA movement came to prominence, but now it is under attack within New York City by its own mayor. The useless and delusional Mayor Eric Adams in a desperate move of political opportunism has proposed to switch New York City back to a nonpartisan primary. I urge you to reject this proposal, it is an actively malicious move that threatens to damage the voices of marginalized New Yorkers, depress the vote of the youth, and needlessly constrain democracy. Do not indulge this man in his proposition and leave our primaries alone. Thank you, Aidan Ferrell

Comments: Hello, I do NOT support jungle primaries in New York City. In the two cycles in which we have used ranked choice voting, we have seen the importance of coalition building prior to election day. As a result, it has lessened the animus so consistently seen in modern politics with its incentivization of cross endorsements. It is unfair to change the rules so quickly after the establishment of rcv because certain political actors did not like the outcome it provided them. Thank you Matt Williams

Comments: Hello, I am a New Yorker who wants free and fair elections. The move by Eric Adams to switch to a Jungle Primary three months before the primary is a blatant attempt at a power grab that diminishes the voices of not only minority voters but also young people who have come out in unprecedented numbers to vote. Eric Adams must not be allowed to cheat and rewrite the rules just because the cards are not in his favor. We must not change a system that the PEOPLE voted into place. At a time where New Yorkers refuse to abide by kings REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL and please respect the will of the people of NYC who voted to institute RCV for a more equitable democracy

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. We already went through this before, when we decided on ranked choice a few years ago. And Mayor Adams won the first election with it, and it didn't bother him then. This is blatantly hypocritical. Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who votes in every single election, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." How dare the mayor attempt to force through a change to election procedures without public consent? I am both shocked and disappointed in this blatant act of chicanery. This change would diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab. Mayor Adams should be ashamed of himself. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because one man is upset at the outcome. This would be an undemocratic overthrow of the form of elections chosen by the people of New York City. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Comments: I am a NYC voter who was an independent for many years, and because of our closed primary system, was forced to affiliate with the Democratic Party. So I am a firm believer in non-partisan elections. I am in support of both open primaries to allow independent, non-alliliated voters to participate as equals and also a firm supporter of RCV. The Charter Commission should in no way overrule the voters in undermining RCV. I do support a proposal of the first round of voting being both ranked choice and an open primary, and then the top two or three candidates facing a run off. I do not support the Commission placing any proposal on the ballot that undermines the system of ranked choice voting, which New Yorkers voted for and are just getting the hang of how to use it to express their voting preferences.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Madi

Topic: Submit Written Testimony

Name: Danny Battista

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

Comments: The following is testimony as delivered to the Charter Revision Commission hearing on July 7, 2025 in Harlem. My name is Danny Battista. Lifelong New Yorker, called the city home for 20 years now. I had the opportunity to address you at a hearing on Staten Island in April, and have watched and listened carefully to these proceedings both before and since. I am an unaffiliated, independent voter. I'm here to fully affirm my desire and support for this commission to advance a proposal to New York City voters to move to non-partisan primaries with a top two result as you have described in your recent report. I can appreciate the commission's expressed concern about it possibly being an inhospitable environment for a debate about primary reform given hotly contested races this year. However, I feel compelled to simply say: there's no time like the present. This matter need not wait any longer. And I don't believe there'll soon be some well illuminated and unobstructed runway to avoid an unduly polarized debate on the issue. It is our democratic process of self-governance that has been unduly polarized by, among other things, the closed partisan primary experiment. As a gay man, I've had my rights, my morality, and my very humanity debated publicly - often viciously - my entire life. Legislated. Subject to the rulings of courts. Through this ongoing process, I've experienced both defeat and deep heartbreak at times, and the overwhelming joy and triumph as progress leaps forward, often in an instant, after years - decades of work. Warnings that my having equality somehow diminishes or threatens other people's rights or lives, or will cause harm and havoc - are familiar to me. Calls for delay, more study and analysis, or time for people to get more comfortable with the prospect of adopting something perceived as new or different - however just or right - are familiar to me. It's not the right time. Maybe people just aren't ready. Maybe better to wait and see. Don't go there because there's all these other issues that people may be more consumed with to really care, or to be moved to earnestly consider. One day... For those of us who dare to dream of a more fair and equitable world, for a better way of doing things - to borrow and bend a legal maxim: equality delayed is equality denied. I have great faith in my fellow fair-minded New Yorkers of all political stripes and no political stripes to understand what is at stake here, and to consider the potential proposition fairly, sincerely, and independently of races that are underway, or whatever particular political circumstances happen to exist here in 2025.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Shane Thompson

Comments: I'm planning to live in this city for decades, so I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects - especially solar systems and battery energy storage which will enable our city to be more resilient to the affects of climate change and help reduce the future severity of the issue. Climate change is already impacting our city and affecting our lives. To prepare for the unavoidable reality of this, as well as to make our energy more affordable, New York must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood. That's why I strongly support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. NYC is poised to be a leader in a space that will only increase in global relevance, and solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably. I urge the Commission to ensure that clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized under any fast-track procedures and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review. Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight. Let's not let red tape stand in the way of NYC's continued growth and success. Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process. Sincerely, Otto Altmann Alphabet City

Comments: As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are

Comments: Hello, I have heard that Eric Adams, a mayor whose administration has been riddled with obvious well-documented corruption and who is personally beholden to Donald Trump as he scrambles to duck federal charges, is currently trying to change our primary voting system??? Is this ridiculousness even true? If it is, I would like to register my utmost opposition to his proposal. I was born and bred in New York City, attended NYC public schools, and still live and work in the city. Please REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." Major electoral changes pushed by Eric Adams need to summarily dismissed. Thank you, Devan Aptekar

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Please do not usurp the democratic process which New Yorkers voted for. It's critical we respect the voices of the 74% of New Yorkers who voted in favor of ranked choice voting. It would weaken our democratic system if we were to change the very system which upholds us as the beacon of democratic values around the world. Please keep ranked choice voting, regardless pressure!

Comments: I'm writing in support of the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably. I urge the Commission to ensure that clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized under any fast-track procedures and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review. Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight. Let's not let red tape stand in the way of climate action.

Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process. Sincerely, Mary (Shanshan) Jiang Lower East Side

Comments: Hi I'm a big fan of ranked choice voting because it maximizes the power of every voter. The math proves this out. With regard to closed primaries, I think a party should be able to nominate their PARTY nominee based on the will of the members in the party. Why should some random person have a say who is going to be the standard bearer of a political party they have no affinity to?

Comments: Please say NO to Eric Adams' proposal to eliminate ranked choice voting in favor of "jungle primaries." Not only is this clearly politically motivated following Adams' poor performance in Democratic polls (and consequent withdrawal from the Democratic primary) after multiple instances of corrupt behavior, it also takes away the voice of New Yorkers who voted to switch to ranked choice voting in the first place. Mayor Adams' proposal is undemocratic and unfair to New Yorkers. Decisions about important electoral processes should be made by New York voters, not by a corrupt mayor who is nearing the end of his term. Thank you, Maia Reumann-Moore

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Kirsten

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. Reminder that overwhelmingly 74% of New Yorkers voted for RCV in 2019- overturning it would be a direct affront to democracy. Comments: Hello, and thanks for reading. I have reviewed the charter report and feel it's necessary to ask that you remove the "Top-Two" version of the Open Primary presented in this document. When the report tries to suggest that money in politics will have no effect on the outcome, it references a state (Alaska) that has a top 4 methodology. It fails to make a comparison to any other state using a top two method. For a variety of reasons, I oppose the top two method presented in this report. Allowing more candidates to join the general election, as we have always had, will allow for more voices to be heard. I would support Open Primaries if it allowed a greater number of candidates to advance to the general . However I am also satisfied with the current method of RCV we currently use. Thank you for the consideration.

Comments: I would urge you to reject the Mayor's proposal for so-called jungle primaries. We are just getting into the good part of ranked choice voting! It's a great system and it will benefit democracy in NYC to keep it and expand it. Jungle primaries would erode democracy and favor oligarchs. No power grabs from Mayor Adams! Sincerely, Dave Ruder

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Ankita

Comments: To Whom It May Concern. It is vital that Eric Adams be prevented from singlehandedly taking away ranked choice voting and closed primarys. This is not only an exiting mayor but a disgraced one whose escape from indictment and prosecution were dubiously achieved. It would be the height of misconduct to allow this person to intervene in the rights of voters in what is clearly one more effort to favor his interests before the needs of any other New York resident.

Eric Adams couldn't be more transparent with this attempt to continue to tamp down democracy in our fair city -- his desperation is palpable... and cringe! We fight hard enough in the democratic primary, don't make us fight you FOR the democratic primary! I think there has been a clear demonstration that new yorkers are sick and tired of Adams' bullshit, this is no exception. REJECT THIS PROPOSAL!!! Thanks, Graham Comments: I urge the commission to reject proposals to abandon ranked choice voting. This method is used with great success all over the world. It is just beginning to show results towards New Yorkers being better represented. To abandon it now makes no sense, but does empower those who wish to thwart the will of the electorate.

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Rank Choice Voting is a shining example of how we can have different voices represented and allows for true democracy in our city. We get more interesting candidates that represent the people through this process. Additionally, it allows for more people to get excited about the process. I urge this commission to reject Eric Adams' proposal to get rid of RCV. Thank you, Michelle de Vera

Comments: Hey there - as someone who has long supported ranked choice voting, it has been great to see New York adopt this for the Democratic primary. Specifically, it was great to see candidates form alliances and build coalitions based on positive change, as opposed to needing to fight one another for voters. The cross endorsement of multiple candidates this election season was a great example of this, and made me feel proud to be a New Yorker! I'm super disappointed, but honestly not surprised, to see Mayor Adams attempt to remove this. This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thanks and happy to chat more on this, Rich Comments: Hello, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." I believe that this change would harm New Yorkers ability to have a mayor that represents their needs, forcing them to choose between options deemed politically palatable by establishment parties. Instead New Yorkers should be able to choose a mayor that best represents their values. This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. Comments: If you get rid of the rank choice voting, you are infringing on the peoples rights due to your own dissatisfaction with the results of the election, in other words, you are trying to steal the election from future candidates that you do not like. The city has spoken of you don't like it tough nuts.

Comments: Dear Members of the NYC Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing to express my opposition to the potential ballot proposal for open primaries and jungle primaries. Our city's recent adoption of the successful and popular ranked choice voting system and public finance campaign program is undermined by this Commission's proposal recommendation for open primaries and jungle primaries. Your Commission was not convened to address changes to our city's electoral system, which already encourages strong participation from voters. Special interests can and will spend enormous sums to game open and jungle primary elections, weakening the role of matching funds approved by voters to encourage fair elections. Additionally, open and jungle primaries would suppress the right for duly registered political party members to use the ranked choice voting system to elect the best candidate for their party. It's clear that it would not benefit the city's electoral system to eliminate the role of primary elections within political parties and diminish the power of grassroots donations in favor of special interests. I strongly encourage the Commission to withdraw the open and jungle primaries ballot proposal. I must emphasize that i am not in favor of a closed primary system and i understand the Commission intent in opening the political process to a increasingly diverse electorate but if we wish to approach electoral reform, we should do so in a manner that is enables the addition of additional parties and not limit reforms into reinforcing a consistent two party system that is increasingly losing popularity with a larger swath of the electorate. Reforms such as PER(Proportional Representation) i am sure can address the goals that the Commission is seeking to approach. Thank you.

Comments: Dear Members of the Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to submit comments regarding potential reforms to strengthen democracy in New York City. I am writing to strongly support two proposals: Extending Ranked-Choice Voting (RCV) to federal elections held in New York City, and Mandating special primaries, rather than party leader appointments, to fill legislative vacancies. Both reforms would make our elections more democratic, representative, and transparent. 1. Ranked-Choice Voting (RCV) for Federal Elections New York City voters overwhelmingly approved Ranked-Choice Voting in 2019 for local primaries and special elections. The system is popular, easy to use, and empowers voters to express their full preferences. It has improved civility in campaigns and ensured that winners have broader support. Now, the city should take the next step by adopting RCV for federal offices (Congress and U.S. Senate) in elections held within New York City. Legal Authority The city has the legal right to adopt RCV for federal elections conducted within its borders. The U.S. Constitution gives states (and by extension localities empowered by state law) the authority to determine the "times, places, and manner" of elections. As long as the system complies with federal law (e.g., equal protection and the Voting Rights Act), localities can implement RCV. In fact, other jurisdictions already use RCV for federal elections: Alaska used RCV in its 2022 U.S. House and Senate races. Maine has used RCV for U.S. House races since 2018 and U.S. Senate races since 2020. RCV is clearly permissible for federal contests under both state and federal law. A citywide implementation would not require an act of Congress or a state constitutional amendment. Why It Matters New York's congressional primaries are often held in safe seats where the winner of the primary effectively determines who goes to Washington. Yet in crowded fields, a nominee can prevail with just a small fraction of the vote. RCV ensures that the winner has majority support, discourages negative campaigning, and avoids spoiler dynamics. Furthermore, RCV would help elevate underrepresented candidates in crowded fields and lead to more consensus-driven representation.

2. Filling Vacant Seats Through Democratic Primaries Currently, when a City Council or State legislative seat becomes vacant mid-term, party leaders (via the county committee) select the nominee for a special election. This practice excludes voters from the nomination process and concentrates power in the hands of a few insiders. Instead, the City Charter should be amended to require special primaries to select party nominees in all special elections for legislative seats, including the City Council and state legislative offices within the city.

Why the Status Quo Is Undemocratic The current system allows a small number of party insiders — sometimes as few as a few dozen county committee members — to handpick the next elected official in one of the most diverse and populous cities in the world. In some boroughs, this process has led to accusations of nepotism and machine politics. Voters deserve the right to choose their representatives. Especially in one-party districts, the county committee's choice often becomes the de facto winner, disenfranchising the broader electorate.

A Better Way: Special Primaries New York City should follow the lead of states like California and Washington that use nonpartisan or open primaries in special elections. At a minimum, city law should mandate that parties hold primaries to determine their nominees when a vacancy occurs — just as they do during regular election cycles. Holding a short, well-publicized special primary allows grassroots candidates a fair shot and gives voters a meaningful say in the future of their representation.

Conclusion These two reforms — extending RCV to federal elections and requiring primaries to fill vacant seats — would ensure that New Yorkers have a stronger voice in their democracy. They promote broader participation, greater transparency, and more representative outcomes. I urge the Charter Revision Commission to consider both proposals for inclusion in the next ballot measure. Thank you for your time and your dedication to strengthening our city's democratic institutions. Sincerely, Rudi Weinberg

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Anna

Comments: Changing the way we vote in primaries after more than 70 percent of people voted for ranked choice voting is disgusting. Eric Adams is corrupt and doesn't act for the people of our great city. This would destroy the voting power of marginalized groups and should not be allowed to happen. Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change is clearly undemocratic and takes away the system New Yorkers overwhelmingly love. As a New York democrat, I do not have many options in the election cycle to make my voice truly heard, and it's hard to have a candidate who represents my views to get any traction if they are not explicitly endorsed by a handful of key decision makers. Thanks to ranked choice, voting has changed that for the better, and allows for more diverse viewpoints and candidates! I finally feel like my vote counts because of RCV. I just don't understand why you would want to take that away from us young people when we're finally inspired to get involved in our democratic process. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Dan Cathie

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Zoë Gioia

Comments: Hello, I am writing as a concerned New Yorker, urging you to reject Eric Adams's proposal to change our current primary system (ranked-choice voting) to a "jungle primary." This change would upend a democratically enacted policy, disregarding the choice made by thousands of New Yorkers to promote fair, productive elections. A "jungle primary" would diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers and depress youth turnout for elections. This transparent power-grab reflects Mayor Adams's unpopularity. Please respect the will of the people as voted and retain ranked-choice voting as is. Thank you, Holly Dowell

Comments: As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Comments: As a New Yorker who votes in both the primary and general elections we need Rank Choice Voting to exercise our options. Voting for different candidates helps me conduct my own research on different policies that is the most or to the least effective. I am also able to talk to others about their own options and it is important. Rank Choice Voting gives voters like me options.

Comments: As a New Yorker and advocate for climate resilience, I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects - especially solar systems and battery energy storage. Climate change is already impacting our city with more extreme heat, flooding, and grid stress. To prepare for a safer, more affordable, and resilient future, New York must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood. That's why I support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably. I urge the Commission to ensure that clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized under any fast-track procedures and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review. Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight. Let's not let red tape stand in the way of climate action. Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process. Sincerely, Juhi Gulati

Comments: Hello, As a lifelong New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' "JUNGLE PRIMARY" ELECTIONS PROPOSAL. Firstly, this change is a transparent, vengeful power-grab from a mayor who betrayed the Democrats who elected him. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate to cling to power and relevance. Secondly, New Yorkers have and deserve to keep an election system where the MAJORITY OF VOTERS DECIDE THE OUTCOME. In "jungle primaries," candidates receiving even as low as 20% of first-round votes can be allowed to advance. This system would SHRINK, not expand, the people's voting power. Thirdly, as an independent-minded voter, I know that "jungle primaries" DO NOT help turn out independent voters; studies have already shown this. Encouraging voter registration and expanding Ranked Choice Voting to general elections would ACTUALLY help independent New Yorkers, not capitulating to Eric Adams' cowardice. Lastly, changing our election system without consulting voters will DISENFRANCHISE New Yorkers of color, especially in Black and Brown communities. The city must continue connecting with these communities about elections and Ranked-Choice Voting, not yank the rug out from under them so soon into the transition to Ranked-Choice Voting. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank You, Jack Trowbridge

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I strongly oppose Mayor Adams proposal to take away ranked choice voting in primaries. We fought hard to get to a ranked choice voting system where I as a voter can vote according to my values, and support as many candidates as I think will work for me and a city I want to live in. This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. Comments: As a New Yorker who supports democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Comments: Hi, my name is Joe Graham, a 5 year resident of NYC. I feel strongly that this stupid attempt at instituting a jungle primary system in NY is a naked attempt by the Adams administration to lessen the impact of ranked choice voting which made a difference in Zohran Mamdani's historic victory in the Democratic primary for mayor. New Yorkers have only just begun to understand how to vote within a ranked choice voting system. Attempting to change the system again will only serve to confuse voters further. I strongly urge that the City reject this proposal.

Comments: I'm writing as a concerned New Yorker who deeply values our democratic process and believes every voice should be heard in our elections. I'm troubled by Mayor Adams' proposal to switch New York City to a "jungle primary" system. This isn't just about changing election mechanics—it's about protecting the progress we've made in ensuring all communities have meaningful representation in our democracy. Our current primary system, especially with ranked-choice voting, has given voters more choice and allowed diverse candidates to compete on a more level playing field. Moving to a jungle primary would be a step backward that could silence the very communities who have fought hardest to make their voices heard. I'm particularly concerned that this proposal comes at a time when our city faces so many pressing challenges that deserve our elected officials' full attention. Rather than changing the rules mid-game, we should be focused on addressing the real issues facing New Yorkers—housing, public safety, economic opportunity, and rebuilding trust in our institutions. I urge you to stand with your constituents and oppose this proposal. Our democracy works best when we strengthen participation, not when we create barriers or confusion that might discourage people from voting. Thank you for your time and for representing our interests. I look forward to your response on this important matter. Sincerely, Veronica Chan Prospect Heights, Brooklyn Resident

Comments: I'm writing to object to Eric Adams' attempt to change the system of voting that we are currently using in our city primaries. The candidates this year did a great job of educating the public about how to use ranked choice voting. The turnout for the Democratic primary -- the highest in many years - suggests that many of us appreciate the opportunity to rank the candidates, to show our preferences. This is democracy in action. The "jungle primary" strikes at the system of political parties. I, for one, choose my party based on how closely their policies mirror my concerns and my ideals. I appreciate having primaries in which we have the opportunity to weigh several candidates. Republicans can have their own primary, and then in the general election candidates from all the parties compete against one another. Our current system is just in second election. Let us just stick to this system for several more election cycles to see how things develop. I resent that a mayor who is simply upset that he is losing can come along and shake up a system that was voted upon by New Yorkers just 5 or 6 years ago. Let's give our choices a chance. Sincerely, Susan Yohn

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Alexander

Comments: Additional comment on Question #4 I shot some important footage on Sony 3/4 in tape. I later learned and so did everyone else, the shelf life was short. Then I learned that after 20 years the tapes could be so fragile that I could lose a lot of the information on the tapes. I was told to transfer the tapes to Beta and digital immediately. And you know what? I still held on to the 3/4 in tapes just in case.

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. If the Mayor feels that there are communities who are disenfranchised by the change to RCV, the solution is to work more proactively to do voter outreach and education, not to overturn a properly implemented, fiscally responsible, and effective system. Please reject the repeal proposal. Thank you, Astrid M. Aune

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, would serve to silence my voice as a high earning tax paying small business owner (5 employees) in Manhattan. I do not want this. Please respect the ranked choice voting desires of this great city. Thank you, Vlad

Comments: Hello, I recently moved to New York, after being born and raised in NJ for 28 years. I was very excited to vote this past primary using rank choice voting (rcv). It felt insightful to acknowledge that politics and elections aren't always black and white, and to be able to put my count towards several candidates that shared the same vision for the city as me and looked towards a better future was empowering (and not just the lesser of two evils!). I am a big fan of RCV. I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Elaine G.

Comments: Please don't let Mayor Adam's' desperation to remain in power convince you to change our primary system to 'jungle primaries'. It's going to depress the vote, make elections even easier to swing, and minimize the voice for our black and brown New Yorkers. Especially as a reaction to the results of this specific democratic primary.

Comments: As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Winona

Comments: The proof that Ranked Choice Voting is working to give more New Yorkers the voice they deserve IS the reason Eric Adams wants to get rid of it. Why are the PLAYERS always given carte blanche to run roughshod over our elections?

Comments: I'm writing to urge the Commission to reject Eric Adams' proposal to eliminate ranked choice voting. I very much appreciate the way that RCV has changed the tenor of campaigning to reduce the vitriol and encourage common ground between candidates. It made for a more civil process and allowed voters the ability to better hear candidates concerning policy nuances. I understand Mayor Adams is upset about something or other but I honestly don't understand why anyone would pay any mind to a corrupt scumbag like him. The only appropriate thing to do is sweep him into the dustbin of history, or better yet, Rikers Island.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Ronan Tuggle

Comments: Hello, It's come to my attention that there is an effort to do away with ranked choice voting and switch to a jungle primary model. Please reject this effort! Though more involved, ranked choice voting provides a very useful and activating method for voters to express more nuanced preferences in the primary. The proposed change to a jungle primary, which our current mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers and depress youth turnout in our elections. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thanks, Ben Lerude

Comments: As a lifelong New Yorker I urge you in the strongest possible terms to REJECT the Eric Adams proposal to eliminate ranked choice voting. Ranked choice voting allows each voter to vote our true preferences without fear of wasting our vote. It is a far more democratic and representative system than the old method. The engagement, excitement and high levels of participation in this last election are evidence that the ranked choice voting system inspires voters. I think some people wish these inspired voters would go away - those are the people who want to end RCV

Comments: As a long-time resident of New York City and an avid voter, I am opposed to the current form of open primary being considered for implementation. My statements are clear and simple. When we make changes to our election laws and systems, designed to enfranchise people. We must do our due diligence to conduct proper community education on the matter and collect statistically relevant feedback from stakeholders who are representative of the populations most impacted. In this case, Black, immigrant, and other marginalized voters. anything less than this is blatant disregard for democracy.. Xamayla Rose

Comments: To the Charter Revision Commission, I'm writing as a New Yorker deeply committed to democratic representation and fair elections. I urge you to reject the proposal to eliminate ranked choice voting and replace it with a so-called "jungle primary." This proposed change would undermine political representation in our city, particularly for communities of color and younger voters, who have benefited from ranked choice voting's ability to amplify diverse voices and reduce vote-splitting. Ranked choice voting has empowered more candidates to run and win outside of traditional power structures—it is precisely this democratic openness that this proposal threatens. The move to a nonpartisan "top-two" primary system would concentrate power in ways that reduce voter choice and weaken the ability of communities to elect candidates who represent their interests. There is no compelling evidence that voters want this change, nor that it would improve our elections. Instead, it appears designed to consolidate political power at the expense of grassroots democracy. I urge you to respect the will of the electorate who adopted ranked choice voting and to reject any backdoor attempt to reverse that decision. Sincerely, bJuliet

Cangelosi

Comments: Charter Revision Commission Members: I write today regarding the proposal to once again upend the NYC voting process by opening primaries. While this proposal raises multiple substantive concerns, as a preliminary consideration, it seems reckless at best to pose such a sweeping change when it is currently impossible to decouple such a proposal from its primary advocate--our five-times-indicted alleged criminal current mayor, Eric Adams. One struggles to engage in a good-faith discussion on the relative merits of the closed versus open primary systems when one of the few things both Democrats and Republicans seem able to agree on is that our incumbent mayor, through his own unparalleled corruption and incompetence, has managed to find himself without a home in **either** party this election season. Surely, it is no coincidence that this paragon of venality should choose the year of his own de facto exile from the existing parties as the moment when he might suddenly find himself inspired to push for a "reform" which would uniquely benefit someone in his exact position. It would seem that one benefit of the status quo, therefore, is some fundamental semblance of vetting against exactly the type of graft our current mayor is alleged to have brought to the mayoral office, and for that reason, I would strongly advise that any deliberation on this issue be postponed to a later election with less obvious baggage impeding any reasonable discourse on the subject. Moving to the merits, as noted above, the closed system provides a system of accountability and vetting that has clearly already shown its value in this very election. Looking beyond Adams, the closed primaries have allowed voters with a range of perspectives to have their say. I have lived in states where disenfranchisement has been a very real concern, so suggesting that it is an issue here--in a city where I get every ballot sent right to my door and I can register online in minutes to vote for whichever party I want--is an argument that fails to move the needle for me. As we see in this very mayoral election, there are many voices in this city, and there appears to already be an unprecedented ability for independent/non-affiliated candidates to have a chance. The secret ingredient seems to be money, sadly, but an open "jungle" primary would surely only exacerbate such concerns. While I readily acknowledge that the case for open primaries is not entirely without merit, I would ask again that such a decision be deferred until it can be decoupled from the clearly self-serving person proposing it in bad faith. Decisions like these deserve to be aired out and discussed in a free and fair process, and I fear that the current circumstances would serve as a bar to such critical discourse. Thank you for your attention to this pressing matter.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, David Diaz

Comments: I was very sad to hear about the idea of switching New York City to a "jungle primary." From what I have seen, the mayor is trying to force this through without public consent, and it would diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers and depress youth turnout in our elections. This is a transparent power-grab by the current Mayor, who is flailing under charges of corruption and who is willing to sell out the City to the current federal administration. New York City should not upend its election system due to Eric Adams's whims and desperation. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Toby Youngman

Comments: To whom it may concern, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New Yorkers are becoming more and more comfortable with ranked choice closed primaries each cycle, and it allows for a far more inclusive voting and campaigning process than other municipalities. I know of many in this city who wanted to vote for more than one candidate, and switching the format of primary elections now would only serve to further disengage voters and those who are trying to engage with the process in good faith. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you for reading my comment, Benjamin Schaffzin

Comments: Undoing Ranked Choice Voting is an affront to New Yorkers and to democracy. Ranked Choice helps broaden the field of candidates, reflecting all of our city's needs. It also allows voters to feel secure voting for candidates with what they perceive to be lower odds as well as a combination of candidates spanning important issues. It is unwise to take away this option, especially as a direct result of losing to another candidate by a landslide.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Ranked choice voting will also provide every day New Yorkers a better opportunity to express their preference for 2nd and 3rd candidates in a field with very few good options. Thank you, [Your name]

Comments: Ranked choice voting is the most common sense, democratic option. To do anything else is a waste of time and money, and is an insult to the democratic process.

Comments: Protect voter choice in the Democratic Party primary in New York City. Protect the right of voters registered with a party to choose the leaders of that party and its candidates in general elections. Protect ranked choice voting in all party primaries. Reject the Eric Adams ploy to silence the choices of tenants and workers, the vast majority of New Yorkers, who have registered as Democrats and voted in the Democratic Party primary by eliminating ranked choice voting within party primaries and replacing it with a jungle primary embracing candidates of every political stripe.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Kelly

Comments: Removing ranked choice voting would be yet another strike against democracy. At every level of government, our elections are fueled by money. Ranked choice voting allows all communities, many of whom are overlooked by their own representatives, a chance to be heard. (While I enjoy some privilege, I know for a fact Donald Trump doesn't care about me.) RCV also gets younger people involved in the process and enthusiastic about politics. Through debate about which candidate(s) we prefer, we cut through the easy TV or social media slogans. By ranking candidates, we can express a variety of concerns. We can show what our values are. Removing RCV would be a huge step backward. NYC leads the nation (and sometimes the world) in terms of culture and economics; why not continue to lead the way electorally? (Yes I'm sad I couldn't say we lead the NBA!)

Comments: Hello, I do not support the idea of switching New York's elections to a "jungle primary" system UNLESS those primaries still involve a ranked-choice, STARR, or other improved voting method. Returning New York primaries to an arcane method would make the elections less democratic and would diminish youth turnout. Please do what is best for the city, instead of what is best for Eric Adams or anyone else who is trying for a power grab. Thank you, -Matt C.

Comments: As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled mayor, who is scrambling to reshape the electoral landscape as federal investigations swirl and his approval ratings plummet. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate to distract from his administration's failures. Our current primary system allows communities to organize and elevate candidates who represent their values, while Adams' jungle primary would create a free-for-all that favors the wealthy and connected over grassroots leaders. This backroom dealing, pushed through without public debate or community input, treats New Yorkers like subjects rather than citizens. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are—we will not be silenced by a mayor who has forgotten that he works for us. Thank you, Dave Ciolino-Volano

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. This last election got so many New Yorkers involved with voting and politics again. After years, decades of malaise and apathy, RCV got voters out of their homes and into booths. RCV increases turnout and makes every New Yorkers voice count. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Anthony Cappellino

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a non-partisan primary. This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. I say this both as a concerned New Yorker but also as an election volunteer, we've already done our hard work, and while it continues, our current mayor shouldn't be rewarded for failing upwards. Thank you, Emily

Comments: I am urging you to reject Eric Adams' proposal to switch from ranked choice voting to a 'jungle primary'. He is attempting to force this through without public consent and this is a transparent power-grab rather than any sort of attempt to ensure equitable, fair, and open elections in NYC. We cannot afford to upend our electoral system simply because the mayor chooses is clinging desperately to power and seeks to circumvent the will of the people. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. KEEP RANKED CHOICE VOTING! Thank you.

Comments: Saving our rank choice vote: I am an 81 year old New Yorker who for the first time was excited to vote by rank choice for mayor of our city. It's the fairest system and the one that gets the most people engaged and involved, which is what we want, isn't it? Please do not succumb to pressure from Mayor Adams or Andrew Cuomo. They're a couple of aging men with sleazy records who hate the fact that young people are ready to take over, and fear that the only way they can vote is by doing away with rank choice voting.

Comments: Please reject Eric Adam's primary proposal, which is a clear attempt to depress the voice of voters and make a win for himself more likely. If he is the person to lead Gotham, then he shouldn't fear RCV...as he'd dominate in all rounds. Let's keep nyc a beacon of democracy.

Comments: Hello, I urge you to reject Mayor Adams' proposal to switch the city's elections to a jungle primary. This is transparently a politically motivated effort on the part of the Mayor, whose corruption and quid pro quo dealings with the current Presidential administration torpedoed his standing in the Democratic Party, to undermine the democratic process in response to Assemblyman Mamdani's victory in the mayoral primary. Ranked Choice Voting works—it allows New Yorkers to vote in accordance with their priorities and increases civic engagement with our elections. The city should not be entertaining Mayor Adams' attempt to dilute his former party's ability to choose nominees that reflect the will of its voters simply because he is out of step with their values. At a time when public servants across New York's government are working to undo the considerable damage that Mayor Adams has done to public trust in our civic institutions, we must ensure that we do not allow him to find new avenues to use those institutions for his own purposes.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Win-Sie

Comments: As a proud New Yorker, advocate for climate resilience, and human resident of Earth, I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects - especially solar systems and battery energy storage. Climate change is already impacting our city. This summer we've had record heat, and just last night we had flash flooding impacting safety, business, and convenience across the city. These extreme events will only get worse with unmitigated climate change. To create a safer, more affordable, and resilient future, New York must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood. That's why I support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce red tape delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even if they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably. I urge the Commission to ensure that these beneficial and popular clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized and fast-tracked, and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review. Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight. Let’s not let bureaucracy stand in the way of climate action. Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process! Best, Bianca Pasternack UWS Manhattan

Comments: I am very excited about the four land use amendments as proposed by the Charter Commission. The cost of housing is the number one issue of concern to me as a New Yorker, and I support any and all ways to streamline the process of building housing in the city, especially simplifying the review process for modest housing projects. In September, I'll be starting my 14th year as a public school teacher with the NYC DOE, and I have lived in market-rate rental apartments in NYC throughout the entire time I've worked as a teacher. In that time, I've seen many amazing teachers leave the city, and the primary reason is due to the high cost of housing, particularly for those raising a family. This puts a strain on our students, who benefit from having experienced teachers rather than a constant cycle of new teachers as old ones leave the city. I personally live in a 5-story, walk-up building which is over a century old. I would love to see this building replaced with a taller, accessible building with more homes, and making this process easier is vitally important.

Comments: Good afternoon, I believe political parties play an important organizing function in our democracy, and I write in opposition to the proposal for open primaries. I believe this measure would make New York City elections less democratic and more susceptible to outsize influence from the wealthiest few. I ask that you allow parties to retain their historic role in our city and avoid making hasty changes in pursuit of unclear benefits. Best, Sam Feldman Brooklyn, NY

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Whitney Bryan

Comments: Hi there, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." I cannot believe this change is even on the table. It's clearly our embattled mayor trying to force through a change without public consent, and it's shameful. This would diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers and depress youth turnout in our elections. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate after all his corruption and cowardice have caught up to him. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Lance Rubin

Comments: I strongly oppose to mayor's proposed change to "jungle primary" format for elections. Ranked-choice voting is crucial for ensuring that all voters are able to prioritize support for candidates who will best represent their interests, rather than simply throwing all of their eggs into one basket.

Comments: I think closed primaries are best. Ranked choice voting should be retained. The problem we have is that it is TOO EASY to get access to the ballot in the general election as an "independent." In this cycle both Mayor Adams and Governor Cuomo were NOT endorsed by the members of their party and yet we have to work to defeat them AGAIN in the general.

Comments: Question #5 The Charter Commission wants to propose to move the City's elections to even-numbered years so that they are held in the same year as federal presidential elections. The rationalization behind this is because more than double the number of voters turn out on average when presidential elections happen. However, in order for this change to go into effect there would need to be an amendment to the state constitution. So then why waste money and resources on this ballot question when an effort can be made to change the state constitution? If the logic is that people will be influenced by New York City voters, I DON'T THINK SO. Moreover, the way the City elections are set up now, people think about what and who they're voting for. Having all positions on the same year, I fear people would vote straight down the line or be more focused on state and federal issues. In other words, our local issues that impact our daily lives would get lost in the sauce. Then there is the complexity of it all. It's just too much to do for one election. We're talking about longer lines, people taking longer to vote, not enough BOE workers, etc. And what about Rank Choice Voting? The Board of Elections got its hands full managing Congressional and presidential elections as is. Do you realize how many voting pages there could be? I wouldn't worry about voter turnout in city elections to the degree of changing the election years. There are ways to strengthen the turnout for City elections. Brainstorm about that.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Peace Twesigye

New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. This proposal is not about increasing turnout — it's about limiting the power of working people, confusing voters and making it easier for billionaires to handpick their candidates with money. Please respect the will of the peoples votes and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you!

Comments: I am strongly opposed to the proposed change to create an open primary [jungle primary] system. I am thrilled with our ranked choice voting system. The recent Mayoral primary demonstrated many benefits: candidates cross endorsing, voters becoming more engaged. I have lived and voted in several states, and I've seen lots of different systems. I was delighted with how this worked. Leave it alone. It ain't broken, doesn't need a fix.

Comments: Hello, I'm a New Yorker and I support democracy and fair and free elections. On these grounds, I REJECT Eric Adams's shocking proposal to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through undemocratically, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is nothing but a transparent power-grab by our historically unpopular Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its democratic system just because Eric Adams is aware that he has so thoroughly disgraced himself. Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you.

New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. I believe ranked choice voting has energized democracy and changed campaigning to be strategic and cooperative instead of negative and polarizing. Ranked choice voting is the way of the future and I am proud that New York City is a leader. I do NOT support a "jungle primary" and do not see any benefit to our voting by changing a system that New Yorkers chose. It is undemocratic to take it away with voter approval. Thank you, Tasha Darbes [REDACTED]

Comments: Hello, I have recently been informed that Eric Adams is trying to get rid of ranked choice voting. I think ranked choice voting is the best, and it should be implemented at every level of government. It really allows us to vote with our conscience and not have to play some strategy voting game to determine our future. Please reject Eric Adams' proposal to do away with ranked choice voting.

Comments: To whom it may concern, I am against Eric Adams' proposal to switch New York to. "jungle primary". The fact that the mayor wants to force through this change without the people's consent and after a historic cross-endorsement by Mamdani and Lander in the Democratic primary is a transparent attempt to drown the race in money from special interests, diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers and depress youth turnout in our elections. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. The results of the 2025 NY mayoral primary are proof that democracy can still work if we fight for it. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Cara Francis Brooklyn resident since 2005

Comments: Do not mess w rank choice voting. It's the only way we get an actual say in elections rather than having our candidate handed to us by a political party. Keep your insecurities about having to drop off the dem primary ballot because the city loathes you out of policy.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Simon Spitalny

Comments: Rank choiced voting offers voters a way to ensure that their voices are heard. It increases faith in and the strength of our democracy. The move to do away with it is a blatant attempt to subvert voter will. We voted for this and we want to keep it. Quit playing around.

Comments: I have been voting in New York City elections for more than twenty years, and I believe that party primaries are a valuable component of a flourishing democracy. These parties allow registered members of New York's political parties to shape the direction of those parties and choose the candidates who best represent their values... AND allow all voters to choose from a wider spectrum of choices in November. I reject Eric Adams's heavy handed attempt to do away with this system, which gives political voice to the greatest number of voters, and I urge you to reject his proposal as well.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Alex Sramek

Comments: As a New Yorker who supports free and fair elections that reflect the will of the people, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers and depress youth turnout in our elections. Furthermore, it is a transparent and desperate power grab by our understandably embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is flailing. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries alone. Thanks for your attention to this important matter. Yours sincerely, Raina Lipsitz

Comments: As a New Yorker and advocate for climate resilience, I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects, especially solar systems and battery energy storage. Climate change is already affecting our city, with increased extreme heat, flooding, and grid stress. To prepare for a safer, more affordable, and resilient future, New York must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood. That's why I support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and expedite approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals more quickly and equitably. I urge the Commission to ensure that clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized under any fast-track procedures and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review. Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight. Let's not let red tape stand in the way of climate action. Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process. Sincerely, Jordan Braunstein Brooklyn, NY

Comments: I am upset that I need to write to stop these proposals that are profoundly on democratic and designed only to sort the will of the people and ensure people with money more democracy than everybody else. Our country is rapidly falling into fascism, and your commission should not be entertaining, any kind of changes that would reduce our democratic franchise. Have a spine, see what is happening and don't let this happen on your watch.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Peter Dommermuth

Comments: Please reject Eric Adams proposal for a jungle primary in New York. The system we currently have is works. It gives people real options rather than forcing them into a system with fewer choices. Eric Adams wants this because he's a sore loser and can't handle the fact that his own party didn't want him to run. That's no reason for him to rush such a drastic change on short notice and with very little public input. Let's keep what works.

Comments: I am writing to express strong opposition to the open primary proposal the charter revision commission is considering putting on the ballot this fall. Despite some seemingly sound logic that open primaries could expand the electorate and increase voter turnout, the reality is that this is simply not a mechanism with a track record of doing so in practice. In states like California & Alaska that have experimented with open primaries, turnout has not been significantly effected. Open primaries will expose our elections to even more influence by big money donors and limit the power of political institutions who actually mobilize working class voters to participate in the democratic process. This is ultimately an undemocratic maneuver masquerading as empowerment and enfranchisement. Given the evidence across other municipalities & states that have experimented with them, I suspect jungle primaries in NYC would disenfranchise more voters than they would bring in. The reality is that recent reforms to our electoral processes, including development of one of the best public matching funds programs in the nation and the implementation of ranked choice voting, produced historic voter turnout in the recent Democratic mayoral primary and empowered a grassroots candidate to break through against significant structural barriers (including $25M+ dollars in independent expenditures from wealthy donors). This proposal strikes me as a direct and highly politicized reaction to that reality. Our democratic processes are finally bringing massive numbers of voters in and allowing people-powered campaigns to defeat corporate interference and influence. This is a brazen attempt to reverse that progress and must be rejected.

Comments: It's very suspicious timing, right after a Democratic primary whose outcome displeased moneyed interests, that an indicted mayor suddenly wants to change the rules of the game. This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Comments: I disagree with switching from RCV to jungle primaries in New York. I especially object to the Mayor trying to take unilateral action to change from a democratic to an authoritarian, inequitable primary. Please don't let this happen!

Comments: As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." The mayor is trying to push this change without democratic consent - he was perfectly happy with a ranked choice voting system when he won an election with ranked choice voting, and only feels threatened by it now that he is unpopular and has been rejected by the Democratic party. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate and corrupt. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Comments: Hello, Writing to strongly oppose Eric Adams' proposal to end ranked choice voting. We switched to RCV for good reason. Over the course of two election cycles, it's elected both centrist and more radical candidates, tracking voters' preferences - aka, exactly what a primary should do, and exactly why we switched to it in the first place. It would be unacceptable to keep cycling through different voting mechanisms in the hopes of guaranteeing a particular outcome, particularly in a moment like this when our democratic institutions are so fragile. Yours, Sarah Hamerling

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Dacnarie Molina

I'm tired of politics in our country seeming like decisions are made so flash in the pan. We went for ranked choice voting lets not set the precedent of people just changing election rules when its not convenient to them. (See: the most recent election changes in Florida)

Comments: As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices many New Yorkers and depress turnout in our elections. This is an obvious and pathetic power-grab by the current embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. RCV has had distinct positive effects on voter turnout. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Comments: I am writing in support of all proposed questions by the charter review commission. The need for more housing supply is by far the most pressing issue in the city. The common-sense provisions proposed are an important step in making the city more affordable by helping to increase housing supply in areas that badly need it. I also support the election-related questions. Turnout in local elections is extremely low. And a very small minority of people are voting in primaries. Even year elections and open primaries would be major improvements to engage more of the city in deciding who represents them.

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Mariaha S.

Comments: Ranked choice voting is a wonderful advance that allows the political diversity of New York City to be expressed and compete in the marketplace of ideas. It allows people to vote for any position they believe in without helping throw the election to what the regard as the worse of the two candidates who appear to have the best chance of winning. Do not set us back by taking this away from us.

Comments: As a New Yorker with a keen interest in fair elections, I urge the Commision to REJECT Eric Adams' proposal to switch New York City primaries to a 'jungle primary'. This systems has nothing to offer New York City elections. It's strictly worse than 5-choice RCV at encoding preferences (up to 3 less choices worse) and still requires New Yorkers to learn a bespoke election scheme distinct from State (voting tactically across 2 rounds is still a consideration that State/Federal elections don't have). This approach further depresses voter choice by incentivizing fewer candidates, which. Our electoral system should not be upended by the whims of a Mayor (who didn't even run in a primary) overruling the will of the people. Please don't take away New Yorker's votes.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Sarah

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Committee, I moved to NYC in 2011 and have voted consistently since then. In the name of democracy and fair elections, I urge you in the strongest possible terms to REJECT THE ADAMS PROPOSAL to switch NYC to a "jungle primary." In a transparent power grab, the mayor is trying to force this change through without either a public mandate or New Yorkers' consent. Ranked choice voting (RCV) is popular with New Yorkers across the five boroughs and good for voter turnout. RCV strengthens democracy—and in these terrifying times of rising authoritarianism, we cannot afford to weaken it. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Catherine

Comments: To whom it may concern, I am writing today to urge you to reject the proposal to institute jungle primaries in NYC. A jungle election system would reward political parties that run fewer candidates. A republican shouldn't get into a run off just because 4 different democrats run and split votes. This is a stupid idea that disenfranchises voters. It is also grossly irresponsible for politicians to keep changing election rules in the city. Voters are just getting used to Ranked Choice Voting; switching so quickly to a new, more confusing process would hurt the democratic process and cause young New Yorkers like myself to lose faith in politics. Please reject this irresponsible proposal that benefits no one but crony politicians. Thank you, Isaiah

It's not democratic and it's not what the people want. Please reject jungle primaries in any form and allow RCV party primaries to continue.

Comments: Hello - Im writing to respectfully request you reject mayor Adams' proposal to shift NYC primary elections to so called Jungle Primaries. In these days when democratic norms and practices are being dismantled all over the nation and most importantly in our federal government, NYC must continue to be a leader in pro-democracy innovation that the rest of the nation can follow. RCV is an easy and more effective way for our citizens to make out voices heard and ensure our votes matter in our elections. It has had a great impact on me as a voter and made many of my friends and family more civically engaged and thats what we need more of in this city not less. Do not allow that to be undone on the whims of our current mayor and his questionable ethics/intentions. Kind regards Alexis Francisco [REDACTED]

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to SUPPORT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change will present primary voters with more competitive options in the primary and a meaningful head-to-contest in the general election. Ranked Choice Voting in the primary introduces confusion and strategic gaming, distorting the electoral process and potentially yielding a Mayor with weak political support despite the complicated preference system. New York City can and should improve on its current primary system.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Chloe Klaess

Comments: To Whom it May Concern, As a longtime New York City resident (Williamsburg) deeply committed to democratic participation and electoral integrity, I respectfully urge the Commission to reject the proposed "jungle primary" system for our city's elections. This fundamental change to our electoral process raises serious concerns about equity and representation. The current primary system ensures that diverse communities across our five boroughs have meaningful opportunities to participate in candidate selection. A jungle primary risks diluting the influence of underrepresented communities, particularly communities of color, and could significantly reduce voter participation among young New Yorkers who are already underrepresented in our democratic process. Moreover, this proposal appears to be advancing without adequate public input or comprehensive analysis of its long-term implications for our city's democratic institutions. New Yorkers deserve transparency and genuine community engagement when considering changes this significant to our electoral system. Our current primary system, while imperfect, provides clear pathways for civic participation and has served as a foundation for building diverse representation in city government. Rather than implementing untested structural changes, we should focus on strengthening voter access, education, and engagement within our existing framework. I respectfully ask the Commission to prioritize the voices of New Yorkers who have not been adequately consulted on this proposal and to reject this unnecessary disruption to our democratic processes. Thank you for your consideration. Best, Kaitlyn

Comments: I oppose putting open primaries on the ballot this November. This proposal seems hasty and has not received the broad debate and comment a proposal of this magnitude should receive. Many other options are mentioned in the report, and the reason this one was chosen was neither convincing nor at all clear. Our current system seems able to both provide choice to unaffiliated voters (witness this November, with at least five candidates on the ballot) and to appeal to younger voters, not by changing the voting methodology, but by direct outreach. Please defer this topic until it can receive a much broader analysis and discussion than has occurred, as of yet, in the public eye.

Comments: Hello, I'd like to thank Eric Adams for the reminder that democracy requires diligence and resolve. Without diligence, we the people might not have noticed mayor Adams's blatant attempt to undermine the democratic workings of this city. Without resolve, we might have been too worn down to make our voices heard. The city that never sleeps lacks neither. Comments: As a New Yorker committed to genuine democracy and equitable elections, I strongly urge you to reject Mayor Eric Adams' proposal for a "jungle primary" in New York City. This initiative, which appears to be advanced without adequate public input, risks marginalizing the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, suppressing youth participation, and serves as a blatant attempt by the Mayor to consolidate power. Our city's electoral integrity should not be sacrificed for the sake of the Mayor's political desperation. Please uphold the will of the people and maintain our current primary system.

Comments: Hello, I am a New Yorker who truly believes in the efficacy and merit of ranked choice voting. I believe that Eric Adams proposal to switch NYC to a jungle primary will take away my ability to support multiple candidates who align with my opinions on issues. The Center for Effective Government has reported that "ranked-choice voting would make it more likely that broadly popular candidates would be elected. It would also give voters more choice, allow voters to express their preferences more fully and honestly, produce less polarized and negative political competition, and encourage the election of women and minority candidates." Because of all this, I urge you to reject his proposal. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Best, Megan

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I sincerely ask you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, and in the midst of a mayoral race which has already begun(!) will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers like myself, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot upend its election system because Eric Adams is desperate to confuse and discourage voters. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are! Comments: Hello, As a proud Brooklynite, father, and (hopefully) good citizen, I am dismayed by the anti-democratic urges sweeping across our country. I had naively thought that NYC would remain a safe bastion for pro-democracy elections. I was wrong. Maintaining free and fair elections, and the will of the people, is more important than ever, and that is why I am urging you to REJECT Mayor Adams' proposal to switch New York City back to a "jungle primary." Mayor Adams, the only mayor ever to benefit from ranked voting, has decided to lay a human shaped turd in his likeness on this city as we enter the next election cycle. Mayor Adams, a man who knows he would likely come in 4th in a three-way-race, wants to cut the legs out from under our most democratic process. Mayor Adams, a man who cozied up to authoritarianism because he likes Turkey with a side of corruption, doesn't just know he will lose in November, he wants to leave skid marks on his way out. He is attempting to force this change without public consent, knowing it will further diminish the voices of underrepresented New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and weaken our democratic freedoms. New York City cannot afford to upend its electoral system simply to satisfy the whims of a desperate, delusional mayor. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you. And please let Mayor Adams know we wish him well as he goes home to New Jersey.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Committee, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. I'm 23. I live in Washington Heights and I've been here my whole life. In August, I got married and moved out of parents' apartment and rented an apartment with my husband, still in Washington Heights. NYC is a beautiful home to me and so many others. All of us should have access to affordable housing and influence over the future of the city. That's why I strongly support proposals 1-6. Please put them on the ballot so that me and all voters can choose for ourselves whether or not to move forward with them. Many thanks,
Tamar

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Katy Cecen Brooklyn Resident

Comments: As a resident of the city since 2006 and a property owner here for a year now, I am dismayed to see Eric Adams try to pull the ladder up after him by destroying the very primary system that got him into office. Closed primaries are essential to ensuring that primary elections are the true choice of the individual party's electorate and not the subject of gamesmanship. Bad faith actors are already trying to subvert the efficacy of politics in the city and this recent primary election is proof of the deep love the city has for free and fair elections. The turnout for this ranked choice primary alone should speak to the people's deep and abiding support for the election. I want to continue to see my neighbors of all stripes - young and old, black and white, rich and poor - engage in the process of electing our public officials. A "jungle primary" strips the people of their ability to chose a candidate for each party, inviting chaos in a time when the city needs clear leadership they can trust - not corrupt officials bandying about to preserve their power in the face of the people asking clearly and vociferously for change.

Comments: I am opposed to changing the election rules from PARTY PRIMARIES to FREE-FOR-ALL PRIMARIES. I want Democrats (my party) to have a strong "say" in who wins the election, and a purely democratic primary (creating a democratically selected DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE) seems the best way to achieve that.

Comments: I am writing to urge NYC not to adopt thw jungle primary route. The ranked choice voting change was pushed and supported by NYC voters. Eric Adams is trying to make an unprecedented change based solely on his own personal benefit withour any public support or consultation. This is undemocratic.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. The primaries combined with ranked choice voting have been an excellent step forward in making our elections work better for all New Yorkers, and it would be a travesty to let a corrupt, embattled mayor change that for his own ends. Thank you, Kathryn McGaughey

Comments: As a New Yorker and advocate for climate resilience, I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects - especially solar systems and battery energy storage. Climate change is already impacting our city with more extreme heat, flooding, and grid stress. To prepare for a safer, more affordable, and resilient future, New York must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood. That's why I support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably. I urge the Commission to ensure that clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized under any fast-track procedures and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review. Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight. Let's not let red tape stand in the way of climate action. Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process. Sincerely, Kelsie Parker Hells Kitchen Climate Changemakers

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Lee Oren

Comments: I am shocked to learn that Eric Adams is quietly trying to get rid of rank choice voting. I am very opposed to his proposal to create a "jungle primary". It has taken years for NYers to understand how rank choice voting works. To change the rules again would create havoc, confusion, and mistrust.

Comments: RCV allows us to realize democracy in its full form. I'm a born and raised New Yorker, who has voted in as many local elections as I could ever since I hit voting age, and the last two mayoral primaries made me feel heard in ways my past participation has not. While I may not always see the outcome I'm hoping for, at least I got to rank my favorite candidates or see candidates work together to endorse AND learn from each other in important ways. Don't take this experience away from us and limit our democratic right to contribute fully to this election and hopefully see a candidate we either love or tolerate make it to the general. If anything there should be a push to increase turnout - your efforts should be focused THERE and not on limiting our options.

Comments: I oppose the Commission's proposal to modify New York's primary election system to create a "jungle" or so-called "open" primary. The Mayor is clearly tryin to protect himself and his wealthy backers, not help make New York's elections better. Ranked Choice Voting is the most democratic and fair system available, and it works well. Voters have the full choices available to them, and we should expand RCV to the general elections, not destroy this system by making a jungle primary. The Commission should reject this proposal, which will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and force citizens into false binaries rather than build coalitions to improve our city.

Comments: Greetings from Washington Heights, I'm writing to urge you to reject Eric Adam's proposal to resort to the "jungle primary" system for NYC mayoral races. It's incredibly obvious that this sudden move is about consolidating power and diluting the voice of primary voters that are sick of corporate "moderate" candidates that are loathed by the majority of their party. Ranked choice allows party members to best articulate their choice. Yours sincerely, Aaron

This scheme to do away with a voter system that expands democratic power is obviously being machinated by a leader who was federally charged with corruption. Comments: Dear Representative, As someone who loves this city and cares deeply about our communities, I'm urging you to reject Eric Adams' attempt to force a "jungle primary" system on New York. This move would silence Black and Brown voters, push young people out of the process, and is clearly a desperate grab for control by a mayor losing public trust. We deserve better than this. Don't let one politician rewrite the rules for everyone—stand up for real democracy and leave our primaries intact. With gratitude, Michaelangelo

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Marnie Geltman

Comments: Hello, As a longtime New Yorker, I've seen many elections here and been really heartened by the way ranked choice has made elections higher turn out and more equitable. Even though I have had my own frustrations with closed primaries, I urge you to reject Mayor Adams' proposal for open primaries. I believe this change would reduce youth participation and suppress crucial voices. This is a desperate power grab by a mayor in serious political and legal trouble. If we decide to overhaul our election system, it should not come with the stain of political cronyism and manipulation that changing it at this time will have. I ask that you respect the will of the people and keep our current primary system intact. Thank you, Nick

Comments: I support any effort to meaningfully increase voter participation. This proposal does not. There are multiple, vetted approaches to open primaries that actually do so: allowing same day registration, letting independents vote in any party's primary, etc. This "jungle primary" does not. It is extremely transparent what it is trying to do, and we notice it.

Comments: I oppose the administration's proposal to have open primaries. While the political parties are far from perfect, they do represent different policy positions and different political views. Given that, it makes perfect sense for each party to have separate primaries where members of each party can vote to pick their candidate to run in a general election. While the parties, the media, and our educational system need to do a better job at educating (I try to do my part as a CUNY professor) New Yorkers about the party system, what the different parties stand for, and other issues - getting rid of party primaries is not a good solution.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." Eric Adams has been completely discredited and accepting this proposal now would be a mockery of democracy. This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of all New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Amanda Baldiga

Comments: It seems far too rushed to work on a proposal about open primaries in the current election season. I worry that it would cause a lot of disruption and confusion in an already complex and contentious electoral period. Please don't proceed with such a proposal in your June 21 vote - we need a lot more time to understand the ramifications.

Comments: As a New Yorker and advocate for climate resilience, I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects - especially solar systems and battery energy storage. Climate change is already impacting our city with more extreme heat, flooding, and grid stress. To prepare for a safer, more affordable, and resilient future, New York must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood. That's why I support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably. I urge the Commission to

Comments: Of COURSE Eric Adams doesn't want a ranked choice primary! He doesn't stand a CHANCE in a ranked choice election because people want him GONE! Ranked choice results represent what the most people actually want for their governance. Adams's criminal fraud and corruption knows no end, and this voter suppression move goes hand in hand with corrupt politics. This is a clear shot at disheartening and silencing voters, particularly minorities and young voters. Reject Eric Adams's proposal to switch the New York City primaries. We know he's desperate. We're can't change our electoral process because of his whining. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Christoph Whitbeck

Comments: I am writing to express my strong opposition to Eric Adams' proposal for NYC to adopt jungle primaries. This is a clearly corrupt attempt by Adams to undermine spaces for democratic voices in NYC politics, and it is motivated by Adams' corrupt political dealings with President Trump and his attempts to seek financial backing from economic elites. These political and economic elites oppose giving ordinary citizens the opportunity to select politicians who reflect their political preferences. Please do not change our primaries. Sincerely, Steven Koskela

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. As a current Brooklyn resident and a former Manhattan Community Board Member, I'm writing to express strong support for Proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, to make New York City more affordable and democratically representative. I support Proposals 1-4 to fast track affordable housing, simplify review, strike a better balance in the land use process, and digitize the City Map. The city's housing shortage demands bold action. Proposal 1 would make it easier and faster to produce affordable housing, lowering costs and ensuring that all neighborhoods contribute to solving this crisis. This reform is long overdue and essential to reversing the tide of displacement. Proposal 2 would streamline the approval process for smaller rezonings that add housing, protect against flooding, and create open space. These are exactly the kinds of projects that should not be delayed by red tape, and this proposal would allow the city to respond more nimbly to urgent infrastructure and climate needs. The current system of member deference gives individual councilmembers outsized power to block citywide priorities. Proposal 3's new Appeals Board would ensure that development decisions reflect borough-wide and citywide considerations- not just the narrowest political interests. A unified City Map is a step in the right direction, since the current system can impose significant costs and time on infrastructure, housing, and other projects. Proposal 4's Digital City Map would allow processes that today take months or even years to occur nearly instantly. I also support considering Open New York's recommendations for a fairer and more affordable NYC, many of which are already very well-aligned with the commission's proposals. I encourage the commission to dedicate additional time to exploring Open New York's proposal to bring the housing shortage into landmarks decisions. Proposal 5 is a no-brainer: moving local elections to even years would save the city money and dramatically increase turnout, especially among younger voters, working-class communities, and voters of color. This reform would help ensure that the voices shaping local government reflect the full diversity of our city. I strongly encourage the Commission to move forward with Proposal 6. Open primaries would enfranchise the 1 million+ New Yorkers who are currently locked out of primary elections due to party registration rules. These voters deserve a voice in the elections that matter most in our one-party-dominated city. Open primaries would boost turnout in local elections, increase electoral competition, and encourage candidates to appeal to a broader cross-section of voters. I urge the Commission to put all six measures on the November ballot so that voters can weigh in. Christopher Cao

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Rose de Fremery

Comments: Between public matching funds and ranked-choice voting, we've made incredible progress in New York City toward making our elections reflect the will of our people, not our most powerful corporate donors. The open primary system being floated by our corrupt, disgraced mayor would be an enormous step backward, playing directly into the hands of the same moneyed interests who are desperate to keep him afloat. Real New Yorkers are counting on the CRC to dismiss this desperate ploy. Thank you.

Comments: I am writing to respectfully request that the Commission reject the proposal to switch to a "jungle primary." We recently had a Democratic primary with the highest turnout in decades - proof that the current system is working. The proposed change is not based on evidence that it will improve the voting process, make it more accessible, or make it more equitable. There is no legitimate reason for the City to waste its time, money, or manpower on it.

Comments: Having just completed only the second primary using ranked choice voting, it is way too soon to be revising our system for electing public office holders. Furthermore, "jungle primaries" will weaken civil society, weaken political parties, and allow the billionaires to manipulate our democratic processes. Reject any proposals to undermine the role of parties and to tinker with rules which New Yorkers are still getting used to.

Comments: Hi there, I'm a New Yorker who wants to say that Eric Adams's proposal to switch the city to a "jungle primary" is anti-democratic and petty. Rank Choice Voting is amazing! This past democratic primary made it clear that RCV is the way to go. It was the best field of candidates ever. Felt like we really got to make nuances decisions on which candidate and ideas would better the city. Adams is nothing but a sore loser who realized that RCV would bring his defeat. The people want RCV. Anything else would be a betrayal of democracy. Sincerely, Juliana DeVaan

Comments: Hello, I am a Brooklyn resident and a concerned New Yorker watching democracy come under attack everyday. Maintaining free and fair elections, and the will of the people, is more important than ever, and that is why I am urging you to REJECT Mayor Adams' proposal to switch New York City back to a "jungle primary." He is attempting to force this change without public consent, knowing it will further diminish the voices of underrepresented New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and weaken our democratic freedoms. New York City cannot afford to upend its electoral system simply to satisfy the whims of a desperate, delusional mayor. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Sarah

Comments: I think open primaries are a very bad idea. While I appreciate the charter commission's goals and think the electoral system needs significant reform, open primaries are not the way to do it. They do not significantly improve turnout, and often reinforce one party rule. Instead we should be trying to strengthen parties and give everyone a fair shot by moving to a proportional representation that gives minority parties a voice in city council.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Katie

Comments: I am a Brooklyn voter who is extremely opposed to the proposal to switch NYC to jungle primaries. Ranked-choice voting has been a clear success, and makes me feel that my voice is better heard. When the first round of voting ends up with one candidate with only a third of the vote, it shows that voters are very split on their first choices, and having the opportunity to specify second, third, etc. choices means that the opinions of the voters are much more respected. Ranked-choice voting strengthens our democracy and should NOT be changed.

Comments: We, the people of New York, did not ask for so-called jungle primaries. They have failed in other jurisdictions for a reason—many reasons in fact: they open the door to spoilers, big donors and dark money buying elections, and they suppress third parties. They are designed to suppress democracy. We didn't ask for this, we don't want it, and we won't stand for it.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Neel Thakkar

Comments: I am writing to strongly ask you to reject Mayor Adams' proposal to change our election process. This comes from a Mayor who was indicted and then only escaped a trial due to our authoritarian President Donald Trump. Having either of them influence the democracy of New York City is a frightening thought. Please respect the will and knowledge of the people and leave our primaries alone. A desperate politician who is known for corruption and cronyism and on his way out should not have this kind of influence.

Comments: I strongly oppose switching NYC to a jungle primary system. Ranked choice voting, as candidates and voters get the hang of it, has had the positive effect of having candidates of like mind work together rather than magnify small differences. This puts ideas up front rather than personalities, and creates a positive attitude of how we can solve our problems together. Please retain it. Jennifer Brown [REDACTED]

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker, I deeply opposed "jungle primaries." This is a mockery of our RCV, which has extremely high favorability, and is clearly a power play by our corrupt Major. Why is it not until today that I am hearing about it? It is so transparently being pushed through without public knowledge or consent. I support true democracy and fair elections and urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." Adams needs to concede his corrupt power play. Comments: As a New Yorker passionate about climate resilience, I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects, especially solar systems and battery energy storage. Climate change is already impacting our city with more extreme heat, flooding, and grid stress – just last night, we had serious flash floods that affected public transportation and roads across the city. These events will only become more frequent as climate change continues to escalate. To prepare for a safer, more affordable, and resilient future, we must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood. And NYC should be a leader on this. I support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that will reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive Universal Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably. I urge the Commission to ensure that clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized under any fast-track procedures and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review. Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight. As the federal government pulls back on its renewable energy commitments, it is critical that we step up at the largest city in the country and make serious climate progress. Let's not let red tape stand in the way of climate action. Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process. Sincerely, Rebecca Novick Upper West Side, Manhattan

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, should not be considered as currently proposed. Instead, we should have ranked choice during the general election giving votes more choice. The political parties still play an important role in helping source, fund and promote candidates that align with party values. We cannot eliminate the parties or open the rcv up to carpet bagging, opening up our politics to the non sense that was the IDC. Thank you, Chris Smith

Comments: Hello! I am writing to urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." The public has not consented to this change. It will squash the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, seriously depress youth turnout in our elections (I am a high school teacher! I know what I'm talking about!), and is clearly a power-grab by this shameless Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you!!
Yours sincerely, Claire Cox

Comments: i'm writing in support of ranked choice voting, and expressly against the recent proposal by eric adams to switch to a "first two past the post" open primary. there is no better way to allow citizens to express their preferences for representation than a ranked system. voters should not have to be aware of polling numbers or the backroom conversations of candidates and their campaign machines in order to have their voices heard. they should not be caught between voting for a frontrunner they don't terribly like, and voting for their favorite candidate and having their vote "wasted". any first past the post system—whether it's first one, or first two like adams wants—benefits politicians and not voters. it would be a big step backwards to, despite eric adams's apparent claims otherwise, exactly where we used to be. please respect the voters in, and the democracy of, our city. preserve ranked choice voting. with thanks, —max wang

Comments: Hi, I'm a life long New Yorker just recently informed of an attempt by mayor Eric Adams to switch our voting system in New York to something called a 'jungle primary'. I'm writing to urge you to reject this proposal. We had a mayoral primary in New York and we should honor it. Anything done to circumvent that would be, to my eyes, clearly and dangerously undemocratic. Thank you, - Max

Comments: I'm deeply suspicious of the push for open primaries in NYC and I believe that more research should be done before it appears as a ballot measure - not the least because crooked Eric Adams is trying to force through even more of his agenda on ballot measures. I'm still upset about the last round of his nonsense!

Comments: To the Charter Revision Commission: I am a lifelong New Yorker who has lived through her fair share of corrupt and incompetent mayors, but Eric Adams has been the worst of them all by a long shot. It wasn't enough for him to act as an agent of the Turkish government, steal millions of dollars in public financing funds, increase his office's power, and strike a bargain with Trump to stay out of federal prison. Now he wants to do away with closed primaries in favor of a jungle primary that will take power away from voters--especially voters of color--and advantage corporate lobbies and special interests that are able to engage in shady, manipulative tactics to dilute democracy. This is the act of a desperate criminal who knows that he has been rejected by voters and an only hold on to power through changing the goalposts. I strongly urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a jungle primary. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you kindly for your time and consideration. Regards, Sidra Ahmad

Comments: Dear Commission members As a New Yorker of thirty years who moved here in 1994 and has been passionately supportive of representative elections, I ask you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City away from ranked choice to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is trying to rush through without public consent, and with no time for public response (I learned of this today), will erase the voices and votes of New Yorkers with heritage from South Asia, Africa, East Asia, Latin America. It will nullify gains made for African-American voters. It will destroy and depress youth turnout in elections. New York City cannot upend its vastly popular new election system when the voters have overwhelmingly expressed support. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Prof. Naeem Mohaiemen, Ph.D. (Anthropology, Columbia)

Comments: Hello, My name is James Cole, I'm a public school teacher at the High School for Health Professions and Human Services and a proud member of the United Federation of Teachers. I live in Prospect Heights, Brooklyn. As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to reject Eric Adams' proposal to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our corrupt and embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, James Cole

Comments: Saving our rank choice vote: I am an 81 year old New Yorker who for the first time was excited to vote by rank choice for mayor of our city. It's the fairest system and the one that gets the most people engaged and involved, which is what we want, isn't it? Please do not succumb to pressure from Mayor Adams or Andrew Cuomo. They're a couple of aging men with sleazy records who hate the fact that young people are ready to take over, and fear that the only way they can win is by doing away with rank choice voting.

Comments: I am submitting this comment in OPPOSITION to instituting "open" jungle primaries and getting rid of ranked choice voting. While I am in favor of having semi-open party primaries, I believe jungle primaries make it more difficult for grassroots candidates to launch a successful campaign. The commission must make it easier, not harder, for New Yorkers to participate in our elections. If anything, we should have ranked choice voting in the general elections in addition to the party primaries. Furthermore, jungle primaries diminish the voting power of minorities, including Black and brown New Yorkers, as well as depress youth turnout. While NYC needs further electoral reform, jungle primaries are NOT the way forward.

He should be ashamed of himself for such outright self-serving conduct but of course we know he has no shame. Thank you, Benjamin Parisi

Comments: We must not even consider the ill-advised proposal to change primaries to a strange and disenfranchising system of top-two primaries. Our ranked choice system has been getting national praise as a great democracy-first system that has led to increased interest and fairness in all primaries. We must not consider a proposal that is so widely considered dangerous to democracy by people across the political spectrum.

Comments: I am an NYC resident writing to say you should REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This is New York; this state and city helped build US democracy as we know it, and Adams is obviously trying to force through a last-minute change to our election system—established by the government and approved by the people—in an unfair attempt to push out the people's clear choice for our Democratic candidate, all because Adams is greedy and afraid of losing power and money. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Comments: Ranked choice voting is one of the best things about living in NYC. As we saw in the recent mayoral primary, it incentivizes both stronger competition *and* cooperation between candidates—where Andrew Cuomo failed to articulate coherent policy views and reach out to ordinary New Yorkers, candidates like nominee Mamdani and Comptroller Lander made strong showings in debates while also finding common ground. The resulting coalition was inspiring. That Eric Adams wants to move the city to a "jungle primary" system should be taken only as a sign of his desperation. He knows he has failed as mayor in the eyes of many New Yorkers and his only hope of continued prominence in city politics would come by way of gaming the system so that his big money donors could effectively buy an election for him. Adams didn't participate in the recent primary because he knew that if he had, he would likely have been demolished—this new proposal from him is just another attempt at maintaining power and serving the monied interests bound up in his web of corruption. Rejecting the proposal is the right thing to do for the citizens of the city.

Comments: It is absolutely shameful that the proposal to eliminate rank choice voting in favor of a jungle primary is being considered by some in city government. Sore losers cannot be allowed to change the rules of an election they lost. Every single statistic points to RCV as a more democratic and equitable method of electing public officials. The proposal to eliminate RCV is a nonsensical and undemocratic power grab. Do not allow it to happen.

Comments: Please keep rank choice voting. It's the fairest way for each political party's members to choose their candidate. I am a registered voter in Brooklyn, New York. Please reject Mayor Eric Adams' proposal to switch NYC to a "jungle primary". The mayor is trying to force this through without public consent. Please respect the will of the people and keep rank choice voting. Thank you, Joy Millman

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Kapris

Comments: Hi there. My name is Gabriel Slaughter and I am writing to recommend the commission to retain ranked choice voting. I think it is very valuable in that it allows primary voters to express the range of their preferences, which is often how people really think about politics and politicians, as opposed to choosing just one. It also encourages a spirit of compromise and cooperation among our leaders, of which we desperately need more. Thank you for your time.

Jungle primaries have been shown to reduce voter turnout and are less representative than ranked choice voting. I strongly urge the Charter Revision Commission to reject this idea and respect the will of New Yorkers who have voiced their support for keeping ranked choice voting in our city. His proposal would walk back years of electoral policy that distinguish NYC as a place where votes actually count for something, and would specifically disenfranchise Black voters and youth voters in particular. Please do not be swayed by the power-grab attempt of the deeply unpopular sitting mayor, who only has a chance in this upcoming reelection if his 'jungle primary' proposal goes through. Frankly, it's both bad policy and loser behavior. Sincerely, Elly

This is especially egregious because he say out of the primaries -- He knows New Yorkers don't want him to be Mayor. Now, him and his billionaire friends want to change the system that New Yorkers like, because it didn't produce favorable outcomes for him. He cannot be allowed to do this! Comments: Hello, I'm writing regarding the initiative to do away with ranked choice voting in mayoral primaries in favor of "jungle primaries". This initiative is revoltingly anti-democracy. Ranked choice voting ensures that the winning candidate is preferred to some degree by the majority of voters. If the winning candidate in an election is at least preferred to the alternatives left unranked by more than 50% of voters, this is easily a more agreeable situation than a winner with 7% of the vote, which is a real possibility in a crowded jungle primary field. In terms of how well the outcome represents the desires of the electorate, it is mathematically superior. The only reason to get rid of ranked choice voting would be a cynical motivation to make winning easier for candidates who lack broad appeal and have no desire to build coalitions. It would make the experience worse for everyone else, candidates and voters included. Removing ranked choice primaries would amount to no less than a betrayal of New York voters. Any members of the city administration who support removing ranked choice voting from primaries can count on my active opposition in any future bids for public office they may make. Thank you.

Comments: Hi, I'm writing against the new idea of a jungle primary. While I'm open to having a citywide discussion of open primaries, I don't think this is the way to do it. Especially since we just started Ranked choice two cycles ago, let's see how that continues to go and let voters understand that process more before switching it up so drastically again. Thank you!

Comments: I am a retired employee of the NYC Department of Education who has worked at central headquarters supporting schools. I also hold a doctorate in Education from New York University where my dissertation was a finalist for best dissertation of the year. I have worked at the NYC Leadership Academy and most recently as Program Director of the Leadership Program at the City College of New York which is part of the CUNY system. In all of these positions I have always pursued and supported policies that enlarge, rather than restrict, the area of democratic decision making because I believe that democracy, while sometimes difficult and messy affords individuals the best opportunity to make and pursue policies that are reflective of those whom we represent. There is no other choice: we are either supporters of democratic decision making because we believe that the participation of the many yields better decisions or we are supporters of restricting decision making to a select few because we believe that these select few, whomever they may be, know better than the majority of individuals they are assumed to represent. It is clear from the large field of contenders that rank choice voting accomplished two very important things (both vital to a vibrant democracy): brought in new voters and provided voters with a wider choice of contenders than might otherwise be possible. In a democracy, enlarging the electorate and encouraging the participation of those who haven't previously participated are twin goals of a vibrant democracy. The attempt to cynically restrict choice through the elimination of rank choice voting is akin to an attempt to restrict participation which may cynically be the goal of those who support elimination of rank choice voting. I want to argue for those policies that encourage citizens to participate in voting, and as such argue in favor of keeping the system we presently have -- of rank choice voting.

Comments: Please reject the attempt to move NYC to open primaries and a "top two" run-off system. This proposal would be a step backwards for democracy and fairness in elections. While the issue of increasing voter turnout and engagement in local primaries is crucially important, there are significantly better ways to achieve these goals than this proposal. Ranked Choice Voting has already been a huge step in the right direction towards creating a truly democratic electoral system, and voters need time to adapt. Expanding voter choice beyond the "first-past-the-post" system is necessary in order to make voters feel like their votes actually matter, but re-empowering the electorate will not happen overnight. Proving this system works to voters will take several election cycles, and this year's democratic primary was a great example of how RCV helps serve this purpose. An open primary that results in a top-two run-off, even if the primary uses RCV, only serves to re-entrench "first-past-the-post" voting and undo the progress we have already achieved through RCV in voter engagement and empowerment. There are many other means to achieve the goals of this proposal that could incorporate and build on the success of RCV better than this proposal does. Loosening voter registration deadlines, allowing day-of registration or day-of party registration, allowing third party or unaffiliated voters to select a party primary to vote in, using RCV for the general election, and increasing the number of candidates that go on to the general election are only a few ways this could be achieved. I'm sure other people who have spent significantly more time thinking about this sort of thing have even better ideas. The short of it is, this proposal will not solve our problems. Instead, it be a step backwards to a time when New York voters often had to choose between two bad options. While that disempowering, disenfranchising system remains in place for our state and federal elections, we should not go back to that when it comes to choosing who will lead our city. Thank you.

Comments: NO to "eliminate" the ability for our local representatives to advocate for my community. I want my local representative, who I elected, to be able to advocate for what is best for my community. I'm the one living in the neighborhood that it will affect so I should have a voice. This is the reason why this country has elections. NO to allow developers and special interest groups (SIG) to have their voices heard only; and not allow the community to voice their opinion. If you are proposing a one sided platform for developers and SIGs to speak, then just allow the local community and neighborhood that it will affect to voice their opinion. Why allow people NOT living in the community to speak since they are the ones that will be affected. Thus far, we still live in a democratic country, so let's hear the what the people in the community have to say.

Comments: Members of the Commission, Ranked Choice Voting (RCV) is one of the most accurate methods for finding a candidate that is the most fair compromise across the voting population. Voters no longer have to "strategically vote" for the lesser evil but rather can place their actual beliefs on the ballot without fear. New Yorkers of all demographics support RCV and the voice it gives them-- the stats do not lie, as more and more voters from every borough turn out and rank multiple candidates. The Adams administration has absolutely no basis for even **thinking** of changing this, let alone **suggesting** it. This scandal-ridden mayor shouldn't be anywhere near the weights and measures of our democratic society. We the people made this happen in 2019, Eric Adams has no say. Best, Matthew Freitas

Comments: Hello, The New York mayoral primary we just witnessed was a marvel of democracy in action. Unbelievable numbers of young New Yorkers registered and voted for the first time in their lives. This is, in part, a testament to Ranked Choice Voting, which, undoubtedly, helped add to the excitement of the race. With this in mind, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power grab by our corrupt and morally bankrupt Mayor. Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Joseph Keeley

Comments: Ranked choice voting and participating in committed, party primaries are the only systems giving New Yorkers hope that elected officials and the rule of law are still governed by the people, for the people. Open primaries sabotage the miraculous momentum of civic engagement that we're building right now, and the small but growing belief that one voice or vote can make a difference. We will not let this administration misuse the charter proposal system for personal gain and voter block suppression.

Comments: Hello, Eric Adams is a corrupt politician, bought and paid for by the Trump administration. I am a New Yorker who supports integrity, honesty, democracy, and fair elections. I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of every New Yorker, especially people of color, and depress the youth vote. It is also a transparent power-grab by an embattled and CORRUPT mayor, who barely even lives in New York. The city cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate and has no integrity. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Comments: I can't believe it's even being proposed to do away with the closest we have gotten to more representational democracy through ranked choice voting. We're setting an example for how to combat hyper polarized politics with the opportunity for ranked choice voting and it should be expanded more, not reduced! Seeing a broad field of candidates that can better reflect people's votes and cross endorse is how we get more underrepresented communities involved and it would be a major step back to see our primaries screwed up.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Serena Steinfeld

Comments: I am a Brooklyn resident and a concerned New Yorker fighting for NYC's democracy. Please REJECT Mayor Adams' proposal to switch New York City back to a "jungle primary." He is attempting to force this change without public consent, knowing it will further diminish the voices of underrepresented New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and weaken our democratic freedoms. New York City cannot afford to upend its electoral system simply to satisfy the whims of a desperate, delusional mayor. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Comments: Dear Commissioner I am currently writing this to object the undemocratic proposal by Mayor Eric Adams to climate Ranked Choice Voting for "Jungle Primaries" and I highly urge you in New Yorkers best interest to oppose his proposal that will reduce political representation of historically marginalized communities whose political voice has been suppressed such as blacks, browns and other minorities that will be stripped of their voices. Ranked choice voting serves to increase the representation and voices of unique backgrounds of different communities that is the epitome of NYC being a city of migrants and has been recognized for its cultural and ethnic diversity of numerous backgrounds. If the jungle primaries gets approved, it will only undermine that unique voices and identity of NYC by limiting political representation and as the system will encourage candidates based on name recognition alone alongside risk of manipulation of votes through splitting. Most concerning, it will incentivize more corporate interference with their influence of money for specific candidates that meet their interests. Ultimately, leading to politicians to prioritize campaign donations by political lobby's and SuperPacs rather than the interests of the people that vote for them due to increased dependency to fund an more expensive political campaign under jungle primaries. Conversely, this is an clear conflict of interest as Adams was investigated by the FBI regarding his allegations of corruption and foreign influences last year for his dealing with the Turkish government for foreign donation and misuse of power to circumvent laws for his own interests. His charges were ultimately dropped by the DOJ under the Trump Administration in a condition that he would not be arrested while pushing Trump's agenda in NYC. By allowing jungle primaries, Adam believes that he will have a better chance at the general election against his political opponents that he aims to undermine the democratic process. This proposal will only exacerbate the ongoing voter disenfranchisement and the city's struggle to increase civic engagement that only has it recently saw an increase in voting participation of all voting demographic age this primary compared to 2021. As a youth, it is all too familiar that I see young people in my generation choosing not to engage with the political system because they feel disillusioned by the candidates who they feel, doesn't share their voice of concerns or because both candidates seems unappealing. I, a fellow New Yorkers once again implore you to do not allow Mayor Adam's to eliminate Ranked Choice Voting for the sake of his own self interest and in the interest of the people that the city runs on.

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. I'm a mother of two young children, a renter, and a proud Brooklyn resident. I serve on Community Board 6, where I've seen firsthand how slow and burdensome the current land use process can be—and how it often stands in the way of urgently needed housing. These delays don't just affect paperwork; they affect families across the city who are struggling to find stable, affordable places to live and raise their kids. I believe strongly that the housing crisis demands citywide solutions; in decisions that impact the broader housing market, we need streamlined processes that are less vulnerable to local capture. That's why I'm writing in strong support of Proposals 1 through 4. Proposals 1 through 4 would modernize and streamline the city's land use and planning process. We desperately need more housing—especially affordable housing—and these changes would help make that possible. Proposal 1 would speed up the production of affordable housing and help ensure that every neighborhood does its part to address the crisis. Proposal 2 would make it easier to move forward with smaller rezonings that add housing, protect us from climate risks, or create open space—exactly the kinds of commonsense improvements that too often get stuck in red tape. Proposal 3 is a necessary fix to a broken system. Right now, a single council member—and the member who has the most to lose for voting against local, NIMBY interests—can block developments that are critically needed across the entire NYC housing market. Creating an Appeals Board would ensure that these decisions reflect broader needs, not just the most vocal local opposition. Proposal 4, which would digitize the City Map, is another long-overdue change. The current system creates costly and unnecessary delays for housing, infrastructure, and other vital projects. A digital system would allow for faster, more transparent, and more efficient decision-making. I also support Open New York’s recommendations for a fairer and more affordable city. In particular, I encourage the commission to give further attention to their idea of incorporating the housing shortage into landmarks decision-making—a proposal that’s well aligned with the commission’s broader goals. For all these reasons, I urge the Commission to put the housing-related measures on the November ballot and give voters a chance to shape a more affordable, representative, and functional New York City. Sincerely, Catherine Vaughan

Comments: As a New Yorker who fiercely supports true democracy and fair elections, I DEMAND that you REJECT ERIC ADAMS' RECKLESS PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This outrageous change, which the mayor is brazenly attempting to ram through without ANY public consent, will SILENCE the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, crush youth turnout in our elections, and represents nothing short of a disgraceful power-grab by our scandal-ridden Mayor. New York City CANNOT and WILL NOT tolerate having our election system destroyed simply because Eric Adams is drowning in desperation. I am SICK AND TIRED of politicians trampling on democracy when it suits their agenda. Respect the will of the people and keep your hands OFF our primaries. This is non-negotiable. Thanks

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Jonathan

I additionally want to note that ranked choice voting has resulted in much higher quality candidates and political coalitions within the NYC Democrats, rather than the same old winner-take-all methodologies that are so toxic to our local politics. Ranked choice voting is the present and is already enabling a better, brighter future for our city. I strongly encourage the commission to protect ranked choice voting. Thank you, Meg

Comments: Dear Charter Revision Commission, Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions. As a current Brooklyn resident and a former Manhattan Community Board Member, I'm writing to express strong support for Proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, to make New York City more affordable and democratically representative. I support Proposals 1-4 to fast track affordable housing, simplify review, strike a better balance in the land use process, and digitize the City Map. The city's housing shortage demands bold action. Proposal 1 would make it easier and faster to produce affordable housing, lowering costs and ensuring that all neighborhoods contribute to solving this crisis. This reform is long overdue and essential to reversing the tide of displacement. Proposal 2 would streamline the approval process for smaller rezonings that add housing, protect against flooding, and create open space. These are exactly the kinds of projects that should not be delayed by red tape, and this proposal would allow the city to respond more nimbly to urgent infrastructure and climate needs. The current system of member deference gives individual councilmembers outsized power to block citywide priorities.

Proposal 3's new Appeals Board would ensure that development decisions reflect borough-wide and citywide considerations- not just the narrowest political interests. A unified City Map is a step in the right direction, since the current system can impose significant costs and time on infrastructure, housing, and other projects. Proposal 4's Digital City Map would allow processes that today take months or even years to occur nearly instantly. I also support considering Open New York's recommendations for a fairer and more affordable NYC, many of which are already very well-aligned with the commission's proposals. I encourage the commission to dedicate additional time to exploring Open New York's proposal to bring the housing shortage into landmarks decisions. Proposal 5 is a no-brainer: moving local elections to even years would save the city money and dramatically increase turnout, especially among younger voters, working-class communities, and voters of color. This reform would help ensure that the voices shaping local government reflect the full diversity of our city. I strongly encourage the Commission to move forward with Proposal 6. Open primaries would enfranchise the 1 million+ New Yorkers who are currently locked out of primary elections due to party registration rules. These voters deserve a voice in the elections that matter most in our one-party-dominated city. Open primaries would boost turnout in local elections, increase electoral competition, and encourage candidates to appeal to a broader cross-section of voters. I urge the Commission to put all six measures on the November ballot so that voters can weigh in. Sincerely, Ebonie Daley-Hicks Ditmas Park, 11226

Comments: I think Ranked-Choice voting and closed primaries are very important for NYC's future. They have been wildly successful while also representing the will of the people - in the last 2 RCV elections, the first round winner actually won the election, but the electoral process was much less vitriolic.

Comments: Dear Revision Committee, As a New Yorker and environmental enthusiast, I'm writing in strong support of the proposed land use reforms that would streamline approvals for smaller-scale development and infrastructure projects - especially solar systems and battery energy storage. Climate change is already impacting our city with more extreme heat, flooding, and grid stress. To prepare for a safer, more affordable, and resilient future, New York must make it easier—not harder—to build clean energy infrastructure in every neighborhood. I support the Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) and fast-tracked zoning actions that reduce bureaucratic delays for modest-scale, environmentally beneficial projects. In particular, solar panels and battery storage systems are critical public infrastructure. They reduce greenhouse gas emissions, lower utility bills, provide backup power during outages, and protect vulnerable residents during extreme weather. These projects are often blocked or delayed by costly and time-intensive ULURP processes, even when they are located on public buildings or vacant land. The proposed charter changes—especially ELURP—will help remove these barriers and speed up approvals, enabling NYC to meet its climate and resiliency goals faster and more equitably. I urge the Commission to ensure that clean energy projects are explicitly prioritized under any fast-track procedures and that solar and storage installations—whether standalone or part of broader projects—are clearly eligible for streamlined review. Finally, I encourage the Commission to work with the City Council and relevant agencies to develop clear implementation guidelines that prevent unnecessary delays while maintaining community engagement and oversight. Let's not let red tape stand in the way of climate action. Thank you for your work on this crucial reform process. Sincerely, Leanne Block Manhattan

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Katie

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. I've lived in places with jungle primaries. This type of election only confuses people and makes them less likely to turnout in a runoff election. We should be using systems that engage more people in our democracy, not systems that confuse people and keep them at home on election day. Plus, New York City has done so much to educate people on the ranked choice system. We can't waste all that time and effort to change it now. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Elon Glickman

Comments: I think it's too early to even declare that ranked choice voting is a success or not, but I'm aware of an interest in further changing to what's known as a "jungle primary", and I am appalled. Too much change for the sake of change takes away an opportunity to properly evaluate and perhaps tweak the fairly recent RCV process. To jump to yet another method so soon feels completely random and frankly slightly chaotic. Please keep RCV, and tweak as or if necessary. Thank you. Warmly, Adam

Comments: I oppose scrapping Ranked Choice Voting for so-called Jungle primaries. Eric Adams should be ashamed of himself for pushing for this change when New Yorkers, as evidence by their participation in the democratic primary, show that they like the system.

Comments: Written Testimony Submitted to Charter Revision Commission My name is Pablo Zevallos, and I am a tenants' rights attorney and a Democratic District Leader on the Upper West Side. I am testifying in support of the land use proposals and the proposal for even-year city elections recommended by this Charter Revision Commission. The housing shortage hurts us all, and its effect is most acute on the lowest-income New Yorkers. According to the 2023 Housing Vacancy Study, approximately 1 in every 150 apartments renting for under $2,400 is vacant. Low vacancy rates are associated with increased homelessness. To wit, as of May 1, 2025, 116,000 New Yorkers resided in homeless shelters, according to the shelter census tracked by City Limits. The citywide rate of overcrowding is twice the national average, with families with children bearing the brunt of the crisis. Furthermore, citywide residential development—which has slowed dramatically in the last two years—and especially of affordable new rental housing, is concentrated in a handful of City Council Districts. These districts, in turn, consist of majority-Black and Latino communities and have lower-to-middle median incomes. These trends exacerbate segregated living patterns in one of the most segregated cities in the United States while depriving low-income New Yorkers of the opportunity to pursue affordable housing in well-resourced neighborhoods. In light of these trends, the Commission's proposals to expedite the review of land use applications that prioritize affordable housing are key. Specifically, its proposals to authorize the Board of Standards and Appeals to fast-track 100% affordable housing and to fast-track affordable housing that meets or exceeds the Mandatory Inclusionary Housing affordability set-asides in the communities where the least amount of affordable housing is built are vital steps toward enhancing the construction of deeply affordable housing and advancing fair housing in New York City. BSA Fast Track will meaningfully expedite the time table to bring on line affordable and supportive housing, thereby accelerating projects that frequently include set-asides for the lowest-income households, provides urgently-needed care and support for formerly homeless or at-risk New Yorkers with disabilities, or both. Affordable Housing Fast Track will help ensure that more neighborhoods contribute to ending our housing shortage and offer more meaningful living opportunities for lower-income communities. Both of these proposals would improve the lives of New Yorkers, including those with the lowest incomes, and I hope that this Commission will present these questions to the public. The Commission's proposal to create an Expedited ULURP process for, inter alia, modest housing increases in low-, medium-, and high-density neighborhoods builds on the principle articulated by "City of Yes" of "a little more housing everywhere" and should also be presented. I further support the concept of the Commission's proposal to move municipal elections to even-numbered years. These changes would help revive the flagging turnout rate in city elections, which were 26.5% in the primary election and 23.3% in the general election in 2021. However, in light of the anticipated loss of the unique focus on municipal issues brought about by a switch to even-numbered year elections, the proposal would improve by aligning municipal elections with elections for governor and other statewide offices, as opposed to presidential election years, in order to allow voters to consider state and local issues, which are often intertwined, in a more focused and concentrated way. However, I am opposed to the inclusion of a proposal in support of open primaries. Open primaries invite further big money into our politics while needlessly lengthening ballots for voters and risking adding more confusion to the electoral process. Furthermore, New Yorkers have repeatedly rejected this proposal, and there is no outcry for a reconsideration. This proposal should not be presented. Thank you for the opportunity to comment.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, Rachel

Comments: Hi there, As a New Yorker who believes in fair elections and real democratic participation, I'm asking you to reject Mayor Eric Adams' push to implement a "jungle primary" system in NYC. This change would weaken the political power of Black and Brown communities, discourage young voters from turning out, and seems more about protecting the mayor's own interests than serving the public. NYC's current system ensures diverse voices are heard—let's not throw that away for political convenience. Please keep our elections fair and representative. Thanks, Zac

New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is a whiny unpopular baby and aspiring fascist. He's a sore loser, and an incredibly unpopular person (much less politician) and is using what little power he has to act against the will of the people. That's not what a democracy is. The people of New York will always find a way, but I urge you to side with New Yorkers and be on the right side of history and democracy. Thank you.

As a New Yorker who supports democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." Switching to RCV was the best thing that happened to primaries in NYC in a long time, and this change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. Comments: Dear CRC, This comment is my written testimony. As a low income family, we are only able to live in NYC because of the Mitchell-Lama program. For us there is no housing crisis, only an affordable housing crisis. I agree with the written testimony which says:"The City Council is the people's voice and must not be limited, especially in zoning questions which affect our neighbor-hoods and lives." I oppose the creation of a New Appeals Board made up of the borough president, City Council speaker, and the mayor, which would have the power to reverse the Council's decision on a land use application with a two-thirds majority vote. Such an appeals board would overcome member deference decisions but is inherently anti-democratic. Also, democracy is slow. The City is best served by more mandatory public hearings not fast tracking the ULURP process. I also oppose ending party primaries and having jungle primaries, although I would favor a many party system to a two party system Thank you for this opportunity to submit my testimony.

Comments: Hello, As a registered voter in New York City, I appreciate the ability to rank my candidates by my order of preference for the primaries. This allows myself and other voters to be able to vote our conscience and not sacrifice values when selecting candidates. Making changes to the primary process will force "Lesser of two evils" voting, depress voter turnout, and limit the voices of younger and marginalized voters. The Ranked Choice process was voted on by New Yorkers and should not be changed at the whims of our mayor. Please don't change ranked choice voting. Thanks Andrew Nguyen

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Best, Radhika

Comments: "If it ain't broke, why fix it?" NYC has so many problems: food insecurity, homelessness, poverty, poorly resourced public education, and a broken healthcare system. The city's time and money would be better spent on these issues rather than again tinkering with elections.

Comments: Hello, New York is not Eric Adam's city. It is our city--every New Yorker's. I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." His only aim in this is to suppress the actual will of the people and subjugate us to wealthy, powerful, and fascist influences who we have no say in electing. A jungle primary will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent attempt to grab power by a mayor who does not care about the problems of this city. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you, [Your name]

Comments: The recent proposal to eliminate Ranked Choice Voting (RCV) in favor of Jungle Primaries is deeply concerning. This primary finally demonstrated the strengths and unifying power of RCV, in the form of cross-endorsements and a focus on policy and record, and a greatly diminished prevalence of attack ads. It's apparent that the ability for smaller candidates to get their messages out, engage people, and make an impact on the overall election, is a problem for Mayor Adams. This is transparent corruption and an abuse of electoral systems, all against the will of the people of New York City I strongly oppose the proposal to switch New York City to a Jungle Primary, and urge you to reject it.

Comments: As a New Yorker who cares deeply about true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to reject Mayor Eric Adams' dangerous proposal to switch New York City to a so-called "jungle primary." This drastic change — which the mayor is attempting to push through without genuine public input — would undermine the hard-won voting power of Black and Brown communities, discourage youth participation, and erode trust in our democratic process. It is nothing more than a transparent power grab by an embattled mayor seeking to protect his own political future at the expense of ours. New York City's current primary system gives voters meaningful choices and helps ensure that our elected officials are accountable to the communities they serve. We cannot afford to upend this system simply to satisfy one politician's desperation. Please stand with everyday New Yorkers and protect our democracy. Reject any attempt to impose a "jungle primary" and respect the will of the people. Thank you for your commitment to fair elections. Sincerely, Abdalla Hassan

Comments: Moving from ranked-choice voting, a system that allows the people's voices and preferences to be taken into consideration, toward a "jungle primary" that neuters the positives of RCV, would a huge error and it is imperative that this not happen, especially so soon after a huge RCV voter education push. Keep New York's primaries how they are.

Comments: I write in support of the proposal to create an all-party "jungle primary", with the two most broadly appealing candidates to all voters, of any party, advancing to the general election. This would empower the sizable number of voters who are not registered members of the major parties or who do not consider it worth their time to vote in primary elections in late June when not all the candidates they may favor are even running in the primary. This is just common sense to get as many people having their say in the primary process as possible, and I hope it happens for our city!

Comments: Dear Commission: I write to share comments on two of the sections of the interim report. Regarding Ballot Question #5: Even-Year Local Elections: I am, like Common Cause, in favor of this change, to increase turnout and improve representation of the entire electorate. Regarding "open primaries": Like Common Cause, I am deeply concerned about the speed of your potential decision. The "jungle primary" change is being pushed by our current Mayor because of his own agenda, and in today's polarized political environment, we need to consider how extremist sabotage and wealthy interests' subterfuge would subvert the will of the voters in many "open primary" structures. More deliberation and study is required. Please do not, in your June 21st final vote, define the language of a ballot measure to change our primary system. Thank you for your work and consideration, Sumana Harihareswara Jackson Heights

Comments: While I applaud the commission's openness to considering turnout-boosting measures, such as potentially moving local election races to the same years as national elections, I am currently writing to express my concern that there has not been enough time to solicit feedback and anticipate possible outcomes of the specific switch to an open/non-partisan primary system, with only the top two vote-getters advancing, and that the open/non-partisan primary proposal in particular should not be proposed as a measure for the November ballot. As a former Californian who grew up while that state's open primary system was being deployed, I believe the results of elections show that, rather than drastically boosting turnout or forcing candidates to appeal more decidedly to the center ground, boosting moderate candidates, the open primary system tends only to emphasize voter trends already in motion. Concerns about the system favoring deep-pocketed candidates with the resources to reach the city's entire electorate at once - without the limited audience enabled by addressing party members - seem to me to be far from misplaced, especially in an era where corporate donations in politics have been ruled to be free speech. I have always believed that, if we are to have a closed-primary system, it would be a better use of BOE resources to reach out to voters to remind them about the state (and city's) comparatively early and rigid deadlines for party registration, especially in cases where one is seeking to switch one's registered party; I hope you can take this into consideration as you decide what measures to advance on the November ballot. Thank you for your time. Sincerely, Jeremy Lin

Comments: Stop the jungle primaries, aka. open primaries. Now that youth & minorities are excited for a Democratic mayoral candidate, the non-Democratic mayor is trying to destroy the primary system of a party he didn't bother running it. A vote for Adams is a vote for Trump. Please stop rubber-stamping the fascist takeover.

Comments: Ranked choice voting has been one of the best updates to primary elections so I ask you to reject Eric Adam's proposal for jungle primaries. If the primaries become jungle primaries, ranked choice voting MUST be kept, we cannot move backwards. Ranked choice voting lead me to learn so much more about all the other candidates and got me excited about multiple of them, a distinct move away from the more antagonistic primaries of the past. I see no reason why we should change our primary systems especially at the call from Eric Adams who chose to drop out of the primary all together.

Ranked Choice is a system he benefitted from at first, and is now trying to take away that same inclusive election process simply because he did not like the result this time. Comments: I am a resident of Brooklyn. I strongly support Ranked Choice Voting and primaries. This democratic primary for mayor is the 1st time my voice was truly heard. Please REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will disenfranchise my voice and those in my community. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are. Thank you --Harrison Katz

Comments: RCV is a big democratic improvement in voting. It addresses the winner take all system which leaves voters supporting candidates we don't like as the lesser of two evils. RCV gives more choices to voters. Please keep and expand RCV.

Comments: Hello, As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Comments: Ranked choice voting has been a wonderful mechanism for allowing voters who wish for more options in terms of candidates to have the opportunity to select from a wider variety of candidates than would have normally been available. Allow democracy to flourish and keep this in place. Does the current Mayor have the right to limit the democratic process?

Hello,

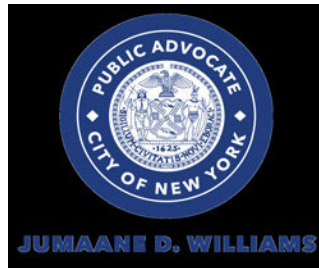

Last Monday on July 7th, the Public Advocate testified at the Mayoral Charter Review Commission and delivered the statement attached below (delivered with cuts for brevity.) I am emailing to have this submitted into the record. Thank you.

Best,

Office of Public Advocate Jumaane D. Williams

[REDACTED]

STATEMENT OF PUBLIC ADVOCATE JUMAANE D. WILLIAMS TO THE NEW YORK CITY CHARTER REVIEW COMMISSION
JULY 7, 2025

Hello. My name is Jumaane Williams, and I have the pleasure of serving as Public Advocate for the City of New York. I want to thank Chair Buery as well as Members of the Commission and my fellow New Yorkers for allowing me to testify before you today.

I want to start off by saying, many of the proposals that this Commission has put forth I agree with in theory, but I have a lot of questions concerning the implementation of some, the legality of others, and the impact of all. On the housing and land use questions, while I do support shortening the length of the overall review process, I have concerns about consolidating the review time for the Community Boards and the Borough Presidents. I believe a consecutive process with a 30 day allotment for Borough Presidents, Community Boards and the Department of City Planning (DCP) each would fulfill the goal of shortening the process while providing these groups with their own dedicated time to deliberate and come to their own conclusions.

I also have questions concerning the use of Mandatory Inclusionary Housing (MIH) under the proposed Affordable Housing Fast Track. During my time in the NYC Council, I found the highest income bands allowed under MIH to be unaffordable for many and as such, I voted against the introduction of MIH. I have many questions on this particular point and chief among them is: what specific income bands would be covered under this proposal? The interim report mentions a range of incomes “generally between 40 and 80 percent of Area Median Income (AMI)”. We need specifics since we would be changing the process and timing for land use matters that have been in place since 1989, a change that was necessary after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the Board of Estimate’s process for land use matters was unconstitutional. (Since the Mayor, the Comptroller, and the Council President had two votes each as opposed to the Borough President that each had one violating the one person, one vote rule.)

In regards to ballot measure #3 that proposed the creation of an Appeals Board and would eliminate both the Mayor’s Veto power in the Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) and the New York City Council's power to override vetoes, I am unclear as to the constitutionality of this proposal and wonder whether this violates the New York City Charter by eliminating a crucial part of our system of checks and balances in the legislative process. It is important to note that land use matters are legislative matters. If this is constitutional, then I might support this, but only if the Appeals Board is expanded to five members, requiring three of the five to vote in the affirmative. I would recommend expanding the Board to include the two city-wide elected Officials: Comptroller and the Public Advocate.

On question 4, I have concerns and do not look favorably on a proposal that would remove a responsibility and a power that the Borough Presidents currently have to vest all the responsibilities and powers on a city agency whose agency head is appointed by the Mayor.

Finally, on the question of even-year elections and the deliberation of open primaries, I do support these proposals in theory. As the Commission laid out in its interim report, open primaries would have a number of positive effects from allowing unaffiliated voters to participate in the primary process, to increasing local turnout and reinforcing ranked choice voting. However, given the relative success of ranked choice voting in New York City, I do believe more research needs to be done into the potential impact this would have on the process, as well as other potential impacts such as election burnout. In conjunction with even-year elections, I think this could potentially lead to drop-off in voting down ballot in addition to a less-informed electorate on local race candidates.

While I'm here, I also want to echo the recommendations I gave at the concurrent City Council's Charter Review Commission, which this administration sought to stop in its tracks with the formation of this Commission. My testimony addressed the ways the Charter can support external and independent review of our law enforcement bodies, including proposals to tie the NYC Board of Corrections' (BOC) minimum budget to 1% of the expense budget of the Department of Corrections and changing of BOC's appointment structure, allowing for more independence between agencies and removing the impression of undue political influence. Similarly, setting a minimum budget for the Civilian Complaint Review Board (CCRB) tied to 1% of the expense budget of the New York City Police Department would help alleviate understaffing at the oversight body. I mention these proposals here, because I believe that they are important in ensuring transparency and accountability in our city's governance. In that same aim, I believe that the Office of the Public Advocate, charged with providing oversight, should be strengthened with subpoena power and clarified standing to sue the city as needed. The Office should be empowered to provide the oversight required.

With these concerns in mind, I look forward to a nuanced discussion with the Commission on the specifics of these proposals. Thank you.

City Charter Revision Commission
Attn: Alec Schierenbeck

Dear Mr. Schierenbeck and City Charter Revision Commission members:

I am a New York City land use law specialist and practitioner (over 35 years): a prior associate counsel at the Department of City Planning; and an adjunct clinical professor of law at NYU. I write today in my individual capacity, to focus the Commission's attention on the need for modifications to the Uniform Land Use Review Procedure as it affects the special permit process.

The issue. A few weeks ago, I attended a City Council Zoning and Franchise subcommittee hearing. The council members asked excellent questions on the multi-site zonings. However, in addition to the rezonings, I sat through a schedule that included an application for four tables for an outside café sidewalk, and some other similarly micro-applicable matters. There were no questions. I thought about how we spend Council's time and government resources-- and make even small development proposals costly and uncertain.

While many special permits from the past five years are sought in conjunction with a rezoning or text change applications, others are standalone applications. These include applications for parking waivers for a single building, allowing ground floor retail use, plaza design waivers, rear yard waivers, and adding a floor or two to an as-of-right warehouse.

One must ask: is it efficient or necessary for a legislative body overseeing 8 1/2 million people and approximately 8.38 billion square feet of land in 51 council districts to have hearings on what is essentially a single storefront or some parking spaces? And moreover, a matter affecting less than a tenth of one block in one of the 51 community districts? Could this not be better decided by the City Planning Commission or Chair, based on the applicant meeting specific standards or conditions identified in the permit text?

The proposals circulated to date address important affordable housing and other government issues in a thoughtful manner, seeking good government solutions. But why only housing and only a few of the ULURP actions? Economic development, efficiency, not-for-profit services, and good government generally is important to municipal growth and functioning, and a willingness of its citizens to make investments. Special permits affecting housing -- and also small businesses and development generally -- that are narrowly focused and apply micro-locally should not be tied up in years of review and face the uncertainty of a Council call-up.

In the 1989 Charter revisions, it may have been intended or hoped that the “optional” city council call-up would mean that the Council would only call up projects that included issues affecting large areas or were of some City-wide interest. Instead, many are called-up for full review.

The proposal. Special permits which only affect a small area of land, and have no larger impacts should be exempted from a full ULURP review and end at City Planning, saving Council time and resources for matters that affect a larger area. Thus, special permits that are (1) for bulk waivers or solely ground floor use waivers (keeping the review for other “use” waivers); (2) that are not for “large scale development projects” as those are defined in the zoning resolution; and (3) do not trigger an environmental impact review (or EIS ), should not be subject to a seven-month process and full council review. They could go through the ELURP-type process; alternatively, Council call-up would not apply to the exempted applications, and the community and borough president review could be the collapsed 30-day period.

The findings and conditions for those special permits have been vetted through a full review process for text changes, which are legislative; the individual special permit is to determine if the facts of the specific site and application meet the findings, which is administrative. The exempted special permits should be administratively decided, with finality at the Planning Commission, as is done in many other localities. Local review and advice through the 30-day community board review would be part of the process.

I urge the Commission to consider expanding the proposal to exempt the special permits described above from the full process.

Very truly yours,

Carol E. Rosenthal

Comments on the New York City Charter Revision Commission's Interim Report

July 15, 2025

Thank you Chair, Commissioners and staff for the opportunity to submit written comments on the Charter Revision Commission's Interim Report. My name is Barika Williams and I am the Executive Director for The Association for Neighborhood & Housing Development (ANHD). ANHD is a membership organization of NYC neighborhood-based housing and economic development groups, including CDCs, affordable housing developers, supportive housing providers, community organizers, and economic development advocates and service providers. Our mission is to build community power to win affordable housing and thriving, equitable neighborhoods for all New Yorkers. We believe housing justice is economic justice is racial justice.

ANHD also convenes the Thriving Communities Coalition (TCC) - a citywide movement of grassroots organizing, advocacy, policy, and technical assistance groups working across issue areas and neighborhoods. ANHD and TCC are united in the belief that our current ad-hoc approach to planning and land use in New York City does not effectively deliver for most New Yorkers, and that we need meaningful reform to ensure a more equitable distribution of development and investment to truly overcome inequality, exclusion, and displacement.

ANHD submitted two rounds of testimony to this Commission already. In our first round we called for a comprehensive planning mandate to be enshrined in the City Charter. Comprehensive planning is a long-standing goal of ANHD to move us towards a planning approach that better aligns and coordinates existing plans while centering racial, economic, health, and climate equity alongside intentional, robust, and representative community engagement to help build trust and work to achieve fairer, more informed, more democratic decisions and outcomes citywide and in our neighborhoods.

In our second round of testimony, acknowledging that the full scope of comprehensive planning was likely beyond the consideration of this Commission, we called for amendments to the City Charter to create a "mini Comprehensive Planning" process for housing by better aligning land use and budget decisions to achieve the targets set by the City's Fair Housing Plan. We are pleased to see the spirit of this recommendation incorporated into two of this Commission's Proposals - Proposal 1 and in sections of Proposal 2.

As stated in previous testimony we believe that any fast-tracking of ULURP proposals is most appropriate when it is forwarding the goals of a public plan. We have that plan already in the form of the Fair Housing Plan, an equity-focused plan that was enshrined in the Charter (Section 16-a) following passage by the City Council after careful crafting, consideration and deliberation, including in coordination with City agencies. Expediting certain housing proposals that serve to advance the Fair Housing Plan follows the model we are trying to promote with comprehensive planning in general: do upfront, equity-focused planning and then allow proposals that match the plan to move on a faster timeline.

This principle has informed our feedback on the four land-use and housing proposals put forward by this Commission that we share below.

Proposal 1- Fast Track for Affordable Housing

We support Proposal 1 to create a Fast Track for Affordable Housing and recognize similarity with recommendations we put forward to this Commission. We are particularly pleased to see this proposal is tied to the Fair Housing Plan passed by the City Council and that it includes a Capital Budget component. As longtime and committed advocates for comprehensive planning we believe these are important steps to build upon to move us towards a more comprehensive and equity-focused planning system.

To further strengthen Proposal 1 we recommend the following modifications:

- For HDFC projects that would move through BSA instead of ULURP, we suggest adding AMI limits or a weighted AMI average to ensure these projects are providing a meaningful amount of deeply affordable housing
  - This could be done through adding a requirement that on a regular basis HPD promulgate rules on the types of housing development fund company proposals that qualify for the fast-track (Section 666-a. - 1.)
  - We also suggest changing the language to specify these proposals must be located entirely in a residential district so as not to allow manufacturing district to residential district rezonings without going through ULURP (Section 666-a. - 2.)
- For mixed-income affordable projects that would move through an expedited ULURP we suggest changing the metric for how the Fast Track's geography is identified (Section 197-f. - a.)
  - For the first round of the Fair Housing Plan targets, commencing in October 2026, the Fast Track geography could be set through the Commission's proposal of identifying the Community Districts with the lowest rate of affordable housing production - though we believe that number should be set to 18 to align with the Fair Housing Plans “limited affordability area” definition

- Starting with the second round of the Fair Housing Plan targets (October 2031) and thereafter, the Fast Track geography should be comprised of those Community Districts that failed to meet their affordable housing targets over the previous 5 year period and that are not deemed a “high displacement risk area” per the Fair Housing Plan
- We believe basing the fast track geography on targets is a sounder approach for several reasons
  - It incentivizes communities and their elected representatives to work to reach their affordable housing targets
  - It does not penalize communities that met their targets but still might happen to fall in the bottom quintile of affordable housing production
  - The targets established by the Fair Housing Plan take a more holistic approach towards setting affordable housing goals than simply basing it on the rate of affordable housing production - including being more response to displacement risk, historic levels of housing production, infrastructure needs, and climate change considerations

Proposal 2 - Expedited Land Use Review Procedure

We support the portions of Proposal 2 connected to affordable housing development and agree with an expedited ULURP for dispositions, acquisitions, and City Map changes to advance publicly financed, 100% affordable housing development.

- We suggest including the affordable housing pieces in Proposal 2 in Proposal 1’s language as well so it can move forward even if Proposal 2 is ultimately not approved by voters. (Section 197-e. - b. 1, 4 & 5)

We are not able to support the portions of Proposal 2 tied to modest increases in housing density at this time. While we appreciate that these build upon the goals and policies of City of Yes, Zoning for Housing Opportunity, we have questions as to how this would play out in practice and if it would lead to an increase in deeply affordable housing given that 1) in lower density districts there would be no affordability requirements, 2) in mid- to high-density districts an increase that does not trigger MIH could forego the UAP FAR and provide no affordable units, and 3) where MIH is mapped there is no requirement as to what Option will be chosen.

- To address points 2 and 3 above we suggest
  - Adding a requirement that proposals in mid- to high-density districts include affordable units through UAP or MIH (Section 197-e. - b. 2)
    - This could be modeled on the proposed language in Section 197-f. - b. 2
  - That where MIH will be applied it must be Option 1 or the Deep Affordability Option (Section 197-e. - b. 2)

Proposal 3 - Land Use Appeals Board

We do not support Proposal 3 to create a Land Use Appeals Board made up of the Mayor, City Council Speaker, and relevant Borough President. While we appreciate the need to balance citywide and local issues, we believe that allowing the Appeals Board the ability to overturn any Council ULURP decision, including individual modifications, would in practice be akin to a fast-track for all ULURP proposals - by removing the Council's ability to make binding modifications. This is particularly important given the other proposals this Commission is considering. If those proposals were to pass, the nature of Council ULURP review moving forward would likely be focused on either non-residential projects or, larger residential projects that are not 100% affordable, in neighborhoods that produce a decent amount of affordable housing today (that is, ULURP applications that fall outside the boundaries of Proposals 1 and 2). We believe these are exactly the type of projects where the Council should have the ability to negotiate and modify to ensure community needs are being met.

Absent a larger comprehensive planning process to establish equity goals and targets and community plans to meet them that we can then measure ULURP proposals against, we do not believe a Land Use Appeals Board is appropriate at this time.

Proposal 4 - City Map

While outside the scope of what ANHD advocated for with this Commission, we support this proposal to modernize the City Map.

Conclusion

We urge this Commission to adopt our suggested changes to your proposals which we believe will help move us towards a more equitable system of planning and housing development and serve as a precedent for future comprehensive planning efforts to build upon. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Subject: Response to the 2025 New York City Charter Revision Commission Preliminary & Interim Reports

Dear Chair Buery and Commissioners,

Community Board 7/Manhattan (MCB7) appreciates the opportunity to comment on the 2025 New York City Charter Revision Commission's Preliminary and Interim Reports, released on April 30 and July 1, respectively. As the most grassroots form of local government, Community Boards play a pivotal role in shaping our communities by fostering citizen participation in City government, monitoring services, reviewing land use applications, and making budget recommendations. Our insights are crucial for ensuring that Charter reforms truly enhance the effectiveness of city governance and address the unprecedented challenges facing our neighborhoods. Our charter-mandated independence is vital for honest, community-driven planning and oversight. Any proposed changes to the Charter must strengthen, not diminish, the capacity of Community Boards to fulfill their essential role in representing our community, educating the public and compiling local input, particularly in the face of unprecedented challenges related to housing production and preservation, affordability, climate, and public engagement.

We have reviewed the Report's proposals concerning housing and land use issues. Our comments are structured in response to the key questions posed by the Commission.

I. Housing and Land Use. The Commission rightly identifies the urgent need to address New York City's housing affordability crisis and structural inefficiencies in housing production. MCB7 has repeatedly identified affordable housing as a primary concern in our District Needs Statements and are eager to see the development of more affordable housing in our community. We offer the following perspectives on the proposed reforms:

A. Question #1: Fast Tracking Affordable Housing. We acknowledge and generally support the Commission's intent to create new fast-track public processes for publicly-financed affordable housing and for projects in those districts producing the least affordable housing. However, certain aspects raise concerns for Community Boards:

1. Fast Track Zoning Action: MCB7 proposes the Commission increase the scope of its amendment by allowing the following types of projects to be eligible for a fast-track process:
  - Projects that include greater than 10% affordable housing, regardless of the type of financing.

- Development on land controlled by certain NYC Agencies providing crucial services to the public (e.g., Health & Hospitals, Department of Education, etc.).
2. Identifying Districts for Insufficient Affordable Housing Production: MCB7 is eager to see both the development of new affordable housing and the preservation of existing affordable housing within our district; however, we object to the punitive tone associated with the proposal to establish a fast-track procedure for applications in the 12 Community Districts that had the least affordable housing over a five-year period. MCB7 has consistently taken the position that all new residential construction in our district should include mandatory affordable housing.

B. Question #2: Simplify Review of Modest Housing and Infrastructure Projects.

We support the goal of creating an Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) for modest housing, dispositions, and infrastructure projects, acknowledging that the current Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) can be overly burdensome for smaller changes.

1. Consolidating Community Board and Borough President Review Periods: MCB7 proposes a requirement that the affected Community Board(s) receive early notice of a ULURP / ELURP (Uniform Land Use Review Procedure / Expedited Land Use Review Procedure) application in advance of certification, ensuring the Board is familiar with the application before the ULURP / ELURP clock begins to run, regardless of any changes made to the review period.<sup>1</sup> We have found this advance notice is essential for Boards to become familiar with the application before the official ULURP clock begins to run, ensuring significant community engagement and thoughtful public input. Without it, the timeline runs the risk of undermining thorough review, particularly for complex proposals.
2. Modifications to the Pre-Certification Process: The reports discuss ways in which projects with affordable housing can be speeded up. After environmental review, perhaps attention should be given to the largest roadblock - the time between application and certification by City Planning. Since every other participant in the process has a deadline, why not consider imposing a deadline on City Planning, at least for projects containing at least 10% affordable housing?

C. Question #3: Establish a Land Use Appeals Board with Council, Borough, and Citywide Voices. We recognize the Commission's objective to strike a better balance between local, borough, and citywide views in the land use review process and address the practice of "member deference." However, the proposed Appeals Board, consisting of the Mayor, City Council Speaker, and Borough President, is viewed by our Board as an overly complicated solution that might lengthen rather than shorten the process. While the practice of a single Council Member effectively vetoing projects in their district, sometimes to the detriment of the city, can be problematic, the residents of the community rely on their local Council Members to support them. This can be a difficult problem, but we believe that solutions should aim for simplicity and clear accountability. Instead of the proposed Appeals Board, if both the Borough President of the affected borough and the Mayor agree, they can overrule a City Council land use action. This approach could provide a necessary check on localized decisions without adding unnecessary additional steps or lengthening the process. So as not to further delay the process, the veto rights allowed to the Mayor and Borough president(s) should follow a very strict deadline window, (e.g. 15 days), since they will already be familiar with the project.

D. Question #4: Modernize the City Map. We support the Commission's recommendation to centralize the administration of the City Map within the Department of City Planning (DCP).

1. Collaboration with Borough Presidents: We urge DCP to collaborate with Borough President cartographic offices to preserve invaluable localized institutional knowledge and prevent data loss during this transition. The expertise within these offices is critical for the success of this modernization effort.
2. Infrastructure and Capital Planning: We support changes that would link infrastructure expenditures and capital planning with areas that will be receiving additional density. This ensures that growth is accompanied by necessary community investments. The Charter should ensure that community investments in infrastructure and amenities are made in concert with new housing.

II. Other Land Use and Planning Considerations. Beyond the specific ballot questions, we wish to offer additional recommendations:

A. Environmental Review: While we understand any modifications to required environmental reviews may require state-level action, we urge the Commission to advocate for such reforms. MCB7 suggests that environmental review can actively discourage construction. We propose that an environmental review should take place only in response to any unusual environmental conditions (e.g. contaminants in the soil; possibility of floods; shadows identified by City Planning or any other City agency; or other significant concern; etc.).

B. HPD Transparency: We urge the Commission to consider reforms requiring the Department of Housing Preservation and Development (HPD) to be more transparent in its dealings with private developers, bolstering the agency's accountability to the public.

III. Strengthening Community Boards and Ensuring Resources. A recurring theme throughout our Board's discussions is the critical need to strengthen Community Boards through adequate resources and support to effectively fulfill their Charter-mandated roles in the face of the challenges the City faces.

A. Resources for Complex Projects: MCB7 is committed to fostering a transparent, well-resourced, and inclusive planning process that protects community interests and promotes equitable growth citywide. Community Boards act as the primary conduit for community opinion on local matters. We serve as the fundamental first line of government engagement for NYC residents, offering unique value in resolving complicated cross-jurisdictional problems before they even make it onto any City Agency or Elected Official's radars. Thus, we affirm the need for additional review time through notification in the pre-certification phase and technical and professional resources for reviewing atypically large or complex projects, and any project necessitating zoning changes or multiple variances or significant modifications to large-scale plans. Community Boards would strongly benefit from an allocation of funds and other resources for planning, in order to be able to thoroughly analyze environmental, socioeconomic, and design impacts of ULURP actions, and community-driven 197-a plans. Where appropriate, the applicant ideally should be responsible for funding resources needed for ULURP / ELURP -related reviews by Community Boards.

B. Enhanced and Earlier Public Notice: To further strengthen community input, we request improved, earlier, and more accessible public notice for all land use actions, with all notices sent directly to the relevant local elected officials and Community Boards as soon as possible.

In conclusion, MCB7 reiterates its commitment to a transparent, well-resourced, and inclusive planning process that protects community interests and fosters equitable growth citywide. We urge the Commission to consider these recommendations to strengthen the vital role of Community Boards in our city's governance. Thank you for your consideration of these vital comments. We stand ready to provide further input as the Commission continues its important work.

Sincerely,

Chair, Manhattan Community Board 7

Testimony of the
New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development to the Charter Review Commission
July 7, 2025

Good evening, Chair Buery, Vice Chair Greenberger, Secretary Bozorg, and members of the Charter Revision Commission. I am Ahmed Tigani, Acting Commissioner of the New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development (HPD). I am joined by my colleague Michael Sandler, Associate Commissioner for Neighborhood Strategies. We're thankful for the opportunity to testify on how this Commission's proposed revisions to the City Charter will accelerate our agency's work to create and preserve affordable housing for New Yorkers and help address our long-standing fair housing challenges.

We commend this Commission's reports, which document the limitations and challenges of the charter's Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) in balancing meaningful community involvement with the emergency confronting the current state of housing access in our City. HPD greatly values, and places tremendous resources into, community engagement when we advance new projects through various discretionary approval processes. Yet, it's hard to ignore that ULURP has regularly become a speed bump—if not a roadblock—to lowering housing prices for everyone and expanding New Yorkers' choices to move to where is best for them. At a time when we need to build in every neighborhood to respond to the ongoing housing emergency, ULURP adds cost and time, ultimately limiting HPD's ability to build deeply affordable housing.

The proposed solutions thoughtfully restore the intent of the 1989 charter to integrate local perspectives into a citywide decision-making framework while providing new tools to address the urgency of historically low vacancy rates. If approved by voters in the fall:

- Bureaucratic redundancy for subsidized affordable housing will be slashed. State and local laws and procedures—including environmental review, building safety standards, agency review, underwriting standards, and public reporting—will continue to provide accountability and transparency in the development process, especially when taxpayer dollars are used. For public sites conformant with zoning, the proposed Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELURP) would not only reduce the development timeline by three months, but, by eliminating “pre-certification,” also free up bandwidth at Department of City Planning (DCP) and on the City Planning Commission (CPC)’s calendar for more complex land use issues.

- This means HPD will be able to get shovels in the ground faster and use subsidy more efficiently, allowing us to build more units at deeper affordability levels. Rather than spending time on process, we can focus on neighborhood engagement, including envisioning alongside communities and elected officials how best to serve neighborhoods with public land.
- At the same time, local voices through Community Board review will still continue to be a central part of the review process. Projects that raise novel land use issues and warrant the time and cost of a holistic review will continue to leverage the strength of the existing full ULURP. However, given the immense burdens of limited choice and higher prices that New Yorkers currently bear every day, we no longer have the luxury of allowing a small group of voices to delay and stop housing. As others have testified before this Commission, today’s charter sometimes puts City Council Members in the challenging position of deciding between what is right for the city as a whole and responding to anti-housing voices in their district. At the same time, HPD remains a trusted partner with neighbors and elected officials who have a genuine desire to strengthen their communities. Where zoning is outdated, a comprehensive planning effort that incorporates anticipated climate impacts, infrastructure constraints, and gaps in public amenities will still place elected officials front-and-center in guiding future growth.

To illustrate the impact, we would like to share three recent affordable housing projects:

1. 1093-1095 Jerome Avenue in Highbridge shows how ULURP disadvantages affordable housing compared to market-rate housing. Unanimously supported by community members and elected officials at all levels, this recently approved project replaces two structurally unsound buildings with a newly-constructed 100% affordable building serving low-income individuals and families, including a set-aside for older adults. Yet even for projects like this one that meet zoning requirements, our financing guidelines, and our neighborhood planning goals, ULURP is required for public land disposition while an identical project on private land would require no discretionary review. For this project, HPD spent over a year in “pre-certification” and 7 months in ULURP itself working with DCP and the developer to prepare and review ULURP-specific documents, even though the ultimate approvals voted on by the City Council was a single page project summary. Under the proposed ELURP, projects that conform with zoning would skip “pre-certification” and continue to undergo community review, but would then go straight to the City Council.

2. 97-04 Sutphin Boulevard in Jamaica shows how the process even for minor changes zoning puts projects at risk. This transit-oriented housing project, replacing a single-story health center, is delivering senior housing above a new facility operated by the Community Healthcare Network and is supported with Resolution A funding from then-Council Member and, later, Speaker Adrienne Adams. The project, however, needed ULURP to rezone the site to be a part of the immediately-adjacent zoning district. In the years between when the project was first conceived and when it received approvals, hard costs and interest rates rose. While collaborative problem-solving addressed the financing gap, many similar projects end up stalled or canceled because of the length of ULURP. The urgency of the current crisis warrants a faster alternative process for quickly creating new publicly-financed affordable housing that integrates into the existing neighborhood. In the future, projects like this one could instead leverage the Fast Track Zoning Action at the BSA, which would be available only for entities formed as Housing Development Fund Corporations and organized specifically to develop low-income housing.
3. Finally, The Beacon East Harlem shows how full ULURP will continue to be used and how it shines. Rooted in the East Harlem Neighborhood Plan and approved by the City Council this past March, this 100% affordable housing mixed-use development on public land benefited from ULURP as it exists today, as well as from the East Harlem Neighborhood Plan and Request For Proposal (RFP) processes. Through it, Manhattan Community Board 11 and Deputy Speaker Diana Ayala ensured continued delivery of critical services by nonprofits housed in the Multi-Service Center by strengthening the relocation plan. For projects like it with multiple and complex land use actions—in this case, a zoning map change and zoning text change to map Mandatory Inclusionary Housing (MIH), disposition of City property, and a change to the City Map to resolve historical property line issues and to create a new pedestrian pathway into New York City Housing Authority (NYCHA)'s Wagner Houses campus—ULURP’s comprehensive approach provided transparency and a predictable structure that helped facilitate interagency collaboration.

In addition to accelerating the types of projects already in our pipeline, these proposed amendments also create more viable pathways for projects currently precluded by ULURP. For too long, Black and Brown New Yorkers, immigrants, people with disabilities, low-to-moderate income families, and other marginalized communities have been closed out of certain neighborhoods across the city. As part of Where We Live NYC, our report on and commitments towards fairer housing, we found that New York City has become increasingly diverse yet still segregated by, for example, race and ethnicity by most measures and that these measures ultimately correlate with unequal life outcomes. While the factors that keep our city segregated have changed, rising housing costs and the obstacles to building more housing in many neighborhoods have continued to limit housing choice for New Yorkers.

As we shared during our testimony in March, housing discrimination and lack of choice remain ongoing challenges exacerbated by our city's severe housing shortage. To meet our fair housing goals, where we build is just as important as how much we build; and we need to build in every neighborhood to ensure that New Yorkers can choose to live in the neighborhood that best meets their needs. The Commission's Affordable Housing Fast Track proposal to build on the Speaker's Fair Housing Framework will be critical to reversing historical inequities that have closed off certain neighborhoods. This framework, which was passed unanimously by City Council in 2023, establishes a long-term citywide housing needs assessment as well as Community District-level growth targets across income levels. By expediting affordable housing in districts that are doing the least to solve our housing crisis, enabling modest increases in multifamily housing, and incorporating the fair housing plan and these 12 geographies into the City's Ten-Year Capital Strategy, New Yorkers will have a greater ability to choose between two viable and desirable options: moving to where it makes the most sense for them or staying in a neighborhood that receives equitable investment.

Recognizing the scale and complexity of our housing crisis and fair housing challenges, these charter tools are a critical part of an "all of the above" approach that builds on the momentum of City of Yes and the set of state legislative pro-housing approvals gained in 2023 and 2024. Over the next few months as we finalize this year's update to Where We Live NYC and put forth bold new actions that build on our prior commitments, we will be proactively analyzing how our procedures and policies would adapt in response to these new charter tools. Should these changes be approved by voters in the fall, HPD will be ready to hit the ground running to accelerate affordable housing production and expand housing choice. HPD urges this Commission to put all proposed housing amendments onto the ballot and give voters the power to advance our agency's mission and create a more affordable, inclusive, and stronger New York City of tomorrow.

Testimony of Council Member Shahana Hanif to the 2025 Charter Revision Commission
July 15, 2025

I'm Council Member Shahana Hanif and I have the privilege of representing Brooklyn's 39th District. Thank you to the 2025 Charter Revision Commission for providing the opportunity for public testimony.

Increasing voter turnout in our local elections is an urgent and necessary goal—one that this Commission is well-positioned to advance. I strongly support Proposal 5, which would align municipal elections with federal election years. This change has already proven effective in other localities, significantly boosting voter participation, and I believe it would do the same here in New York City.

In contrast, Proposal 6—which would end party primary elections in favor of a so-called “jungle primary” model—raises serious concerns. A change of this magnitude necessitates a far more robust community engagement process than we've seen so far, as well as broader consensus across diverse stakeholders. At this time, I do not believe either threshold has been met.

That said, I don't reflexively oppose exploring alternatives to our current primary system. Reforms like ranked choice voting have already shown promise in helping voters more fully express their preferences.

However, the merits of other reforms—including open partisan primary models such as those used in Massachusetts and Virginia—have not received sufficient evaluation. The implications for campaign financing, voter behavior, and representation require careful study and public discussion.

Finally, it's important to acknowledge that Proposal 6 is emerging in the immediate aftermath of a highly contentious election cycle. This timing risks undermining public trust in the process and adds to the proposal's polarizing nature.

For these reasons, I urge the Commission to advance Proposal 5 to the ballot and reject Proposal 6 for now.

Turning to Proposal 1, I'm encouraged by its goal to fast-track affordable housing in every community. However, we must also address the significant pre-ULURP delays: land use applications often sit for years at the Department of City Planning (DCP) and in environmental review before reaching certification. The real bottleneck is not ULURP itself; many projects approved through ULURP more than two years ago are still awaiting financing from Housing Preservation & Development (HPD).

There's also widespread confusion about the land use process. Charter reforms should prioritize community education and engagement—both from the City and developers—to combat misinformation and increase transparency.

While Council Members vary in how they negotiate land use projects, many of us play a critical role in balancing competing interests. From my own experience, including the successful Arrow Linen Rezoning in Windsor Terrace, I've seen how a thoughtful process can deliver more affordable housing. But I've also seen how a narrow set of voices—often not representative of those most in need—can dominate public discourse. To truly meet our housing needs, the land use process must amplify input from residents without secure or stable housing, who are too often excluded.

Thank you for your consideration.

Chair Buery and Members of the Commission,

After careful review of the Proposed Charter Amendments, I write with appreciation for the thoughtful and urgent work you've undertaken to address the inequities in housing development across New York City. You've elevated the critical conversation around how too many communities have failed to build their fair share of housing—an issue that has long contributed to segregation, displacement, and injustice.

Our shared goal is a fairer, more inclusive city, which is why in this testimony I urge the Commission to revise Questions 1 and 2 to ensure balanced reform—and to remove Question 3 entirely.

A more inclusive city starts with reforms that empower, not silence, the communities most impacted by our land use decisions. The specific recommendations below would result in a more inclusive approach.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

QUESTION 1: Fast Track Approvals for Affordable Housing

- What the Commission is trying to solve for: the need for increased affordable housing development in exclusionary areas and for streamlining approvals for affordable projects.
- Recommendation #1a: Align the fast-track metric with the Fair Housing Framework's Community District targets.
- Team Sanchez Rationale:
  - Flawed Selection Method. The Commission writes in its Interim Report that Question 1 “creates an enforcement mechanism for the Fair Housing Framework.” But the standard Question 1 uses to establish which Community Districts are out of compliance does not mirror the Framework's.
  - Question 1 uses a simplistic definition: it identifies the 12 Community Districts that have produced, measured by construction permits, the least affordable housing over the previous five years (normalized for the CD's total amount of housing). This definition does not account for the availability of low-cost housing, and does not establish a specific target for communities to work toward.
  - The Fair Housing Framework provides a more holistic approach: it establishes specific, five-year Community District targets for total housing, affordable housing, and supportive housing. In doing so, it takes into account more than the number of units permitted. It requires, for instance, that the City (likely HPD and DCP) consider whether a Community District is a "Limited Affordability Area," a benchmark that is directly tied to the availability of affordable housing—a more precise and relevant standard than affordable units permitted.

- Furthermore, Community Districts need a stronger incentive to reach their targets, and greater agency in how they do so. I recommend this be achieved with the creation of a "Community Planning Pathway" (CPP), which would create a community-driven path to compliance. The CPP would allow a Community District to exit the "fast track" category if: (1) the CD adopts a neighborhood plan and rezoning that puts it on track to reach its Fair Housing Framework target and (2) the CPC finds that the plan is likely to result in the CD reaching its FHF target.
- Recommendation 1b: Limit the BSA Fast Track to 100% affordable housing in noncompliant Community Districts.
- Team Sanchez Rationale:
  - The BSA Fast Track would give HPD-financed, HDFC-owned affordable housing projects a highly expedited path to approval. But this aspect of Question 1 is flawed in two respects.
    - First, it creates too broad a universe by not requiring that every or a reasonable percentage of units be income-restricted, or setting what those income restrictions must be (aside from the legal limits of HDFCs); rather, the project must simply be developed "in whole or in part for affordable housing."
    - Second, it is not tailored to areas of the city that have refused to allow the construction of new affordable housing; rather, it categorically removes these projects from ULURP citywide. In failing to restrict this path to exclusionary areas only, the Commission removes entirely the Council's ability to improve proposed affordable housing by infusing valuable local expertise—expertise the BSA does not hold—into the project.
    - One example in my district, at 2017 Grand Concourse, illustrates this point. I recommended approval of this 9-story, 34-unit, 100% affordable building, and the Council voted unanimously in favor of HPD's application. But I did so only after fierce advocacy for two key improvements to the project: deeper affordability and increased community space within the development. The BSA Fast Track, as currently written, eliminates the ability of the Council to negotiate categorically beneficial improvements to an affordable housing project—improvements that are rooted in a deep understanding of local needs—before ultimately approving its construction.

QUESTION 2: Expedited Land Use Review Procedure (ELERP)

- What the Commission is trying to solve for: The need to streamline modest, needed development currently delayed by full ULURP—especially housing and infrastructure—by adding a new §197-e to the Charter: an "expedited land use review procedure," or ELERP.

ELERP would apply only to actions that do not require a full EIS and fall into these categories:

- In R6 districts and above, housing projects that increase capacity by up to 30%
- In R1-R5 districts, housing projects that are up to 45ft tall, i.e. "modest multifamily"
- Acquisition, disposition, and City Map changes for affordable housing and use of sliver lots
- Some infrastructure and resiliency measures (flood prevention, voluntary buyouts, solar)

- Any other future categories proposed by the CPC and approved by the City Council
- Recommendation 2a: Allow CPC and City Council to jointly alter or remove eligible categories.
- Recommendation 2b: Exclude high-risk flood zones from ELERP eligibility.
- Recommendation 2c: Add projects aligned with adopted community, borough, or comprehensive plans as ELERP-eligible.
- Team Sanchez Rationale: This proposal correctly identifies inefficiencies in ULURP for low-impact development. But we must retain flexibility to adjust eligibility over time, exclude climate-vulnerable areas, and reward communities engaged in proactive planning. These changes will enable real-time learning while protecting communities.

QUESTION 3: Land Use Appeals Board

- What the Commission is trying to solve for: Excessive member deference and to create an override mechanism for worthy projects blocked by the Council.
  - Question 3 creates a new “Land Use Appeals Board” consisting of the Mayor, Speaker, and relevant Borough President. The Board’s power would be two-fold. First, through a 2/3 vote, the Board could reverse a Council “no” vote into a “yes.” Second, and perhaps more dramatically, 2/3 of the Board could line-item veto any modification made by the City Council. The Board could exercise these powers over all single-borough projects (excluding urban renewal plans) that go through ULURP.
- Recommendation 3: Do not advance this question to the ballot.
- Team Sanchez Rationale: Although the Commission frames this question as “eliminat[ing] the Mayor’s veto power,” in practice this proposal would strengthen the Mayor, significantly empower the Borough Presidents, and greatly diminish the City Council’s power. In attempting to solve for the tradition of member deference, the Commission has gone too far: replacing one set of political problems with another and undermining the ability of the Council to add beneficial modifications that are responsive to local needs.
- Problematic Redistribution of Power
  - Under Question 3, the Council’s ability to make substantive, beneficial modifications is significantly undermined. The Council is not merely an obstruction to new development; it is a vital channel for embedding local expertise and community needs into new development. In cases where the Borough President sides with the Mayor, the most direct path for local concerns—concerns that often lead to an approval with modifications, not outright disapproval—is all but eliminated.
  - In addition, Question 3 undermines the Council’s ability to negotiate localized community benefits—often the only way disenfranchised communities receive the capital investment they need. The Borough President brings a valuable borough-wide perspective; but this borough-wide view may complicate securing benefits for the neighborhood that the project impacts directly. And, like other elected officials, Borough Presidents too are motivated in part by politics; their role is not as straightforward as the Commission describes in its report.
  - It is not difficult to imagine a scenario where a Mayor and Borough President work in concert to advance a project which benefits each of them politically, but is harmful to the community in which that project is located. Under Question 3, the Council would have no ability to provide a valuable check on these kinds of projects: not through disapproval, and not even through a thoughtful modification that better aligns the proposal with community needs.

- Consider the recent Western Rail Yards ULURP, which was ultimately approved by the Council with modifications. Here, the Council negotiated significant community benefits: a higher share of affordable units, increased open space, and the withdrawal of a proposed casino in that neighborhood. Under Question 3, this could have easily played out very differently: with a potential Mayor and Borough President who stand to benefit from a new casino, their majority on the Appeals Board could green-light the casino—with none of the beneficial modifications that the Council secured.
- Finally, the Mayor already has a sizable role in the ULURP process. She appoints the majority of the CPC (including its Chair), manages the environmental review process, and—in the case of neighborhood rezonings and public land projects—initiates the application herself (through her agencies). To give the Mayor yet another “bite at the apple,” as a potentially decisive vote on the three-member Appeals Board, is excessive.
- Minimum Changes. As noted, I recommend that the Commission decline to send Question 3 to the ballot. At minimum, I urge you to make the following changes:
  - First, any application that has already entered ULURP with one set of rules should be allowed to finish ULURP with the same set of rules. But as currently written, if the voters approve, Question 3 “shall take effect immediately upon certification” of the November election. Here, the Commission risks upending thoughtful negotiations that are well under way and may be in a sensitive place when the election is certified. Instead, the Commission could have this proposal apply only to projects that are certified into ULURP after its effective date.
  - Second, the Board should not be given authority to line-item veto Council modifications. A more narrowly tailored role, where the Board can only reverse a Council disapproval, would preserve the Council’s ability to shape proposals beneficially. (To protect against a modification that is so large in scope that it effectively acts as a veto, the Commission could add an “impact threshold” that, if triggered, makes a modification override eligible.)
  - Third, the Commission should limit the Board’s authority to private applications only and remove neighborhood rezonings from the universe of projects eligible for an override. (Under my recommendations for Question 1, neighborhood rezonings in fair housing areas could still be fast-tracked under the “Community Planning Pathway.”)

Before the Commission’s final vote on July 21st, I urge you to make the above changes to Questions 1 and 2, and leave Question 3 off of the ballot entirely.

Sincerely,

Pierina Ana Sánchez

COLORADO WORKING FAMILIES PARTY

Dear NYC Charter Review Commissioners,

I write to urge you to oppose any proposals which contain a so-called “jungle primary”, and to share our recent experience here in Colorado in the hopes that it is illuminating. I was hoping to deliver these remarks in person at the Manhattan hearing, but unfortunately was not called before the end of the meeting.

At that hearing, I heard a few things. First, I heard people confusing and conflating “open primaries” with a jungle primary system also being promoted. These two things are vastly different proposals. While I would not presume to speak for our New York State chapter, particularly as New York operates in a fusion system and we do not, here in Colorado we have an “open primary” system and have no objection to it. This was passed by ballot measure, and essentially all it means is that Unaffiliated voters in Colorado -- about half of our registered voters -- can choose to vote in one party’s primary if they so choose. So, if I am an Unaffiliated voter, I can pick a Democratic primary ballot if I like this year, and then two years later pick a Republican primary ballot if I so choose, as one example. This is a very simple and straightforward thing that preserves traditional party primaries while giving Unaffiliateds input into the process. In general, this system works quite well for Colorado, and it was and is supported by many of the good government groups in our state.

However, what we do not have -- because it was soundly rejected by Colorado voters last November in another ballot measure -- is a “jungle primary” system that undoes party primaries completely and puts all candidates into a giant pool that still is somehow called a “primary”. In short, this was utter nonsense designed to re-write Colorado’s election laws to favor wealthy interests, as it essentially would give them two bites at the apple to elect a favored candidate in EVERY race. In a safe blue or red seat, a jungle primary system essentially forces not one, but two competitive primaries. And in a purple seat, it forces two competitive general elections. It therefore makes it much more likely that those with big money can impose their will, because if they don’t like the first results, they can always double or triple their money in the second round.

That is exactly why wealthy special interests spent approximately $19 million in an attempt to pass this “more big money in politics” absurdity called Proposition 131 in Colorado - I believe, a record sum. And who funded this? Chevron - yes, literal Big Oil. A Walton heir and several other uber-wealthy individuals. And, more than anyone else: Kent Thiry, the indicted fraudster and former CEO of DaVita Dialysis, who was widely rumored to be planning a run for Governor in 2026 if Prop 131 had passed. You see, he knew he couldn’t make it through a traditional Republican primary as a business Republican in the era of Boebert and Trump, so as one of Colorado’s richest men, he decided he would use that wealth to try to re-write the rules to create a path for himself to the Governor’s mansion. He even dropped million$ into our primary elections in 2024 in support of corporate-backed candidates who endorsed this cynical scheme -- a literal nod, perhaps, to how he would continue to behave if this system were adopted.

But the good news for us here in Colorado is this: with raising and spending only about $400,000, we sent Thiry, Chevron and the rest of these uber-wealthy schemers home with their tails between their legs. As soon as we started telling people who was spending all that big money in support of Prop 131 -- and that they were making this investment because they wanted to rig our electoral systems even more in their favor -- it started sinking like a stone from previously favorable polling, and ultimately was voted down, losing 54%-46% and the vast majority of counties in Colorado. It turns out that when people find how Machiavellian and twisted jungle primary schemes actually are, they don't just walk away from them, they run. And they don't have to be told twice.

Once people find out the truth about jungle primaries, they become wildly unpopular -- as they should! In the Manhattan hearing I heard Unite America -- the main organization behind the YES side of Prop 131 in Colorado, and of which Thiry is a leader and major funder -- peddle the same tired snake oil they tried to here about this utter nonsense being good for voters. I imagine it will go over about as well there as it did in Colorado, once New Yorkers realize, as we did out West, who is behind the effort and what game they are actually playing.

You would be wise to heed the lesson that this is a wildly unpopular scheme. It is also, thankfully, one we are quite skilled at exposing, with seemingly no amount of money able to deflect from the simple truths we tell about it. We hope that we do not have to continue this fight with Thiry and his minions in New York. But, if we do, we are certainly prepared to work alongside our state chapter there -- because this David is ready to take down Goliath again in every place he attempts to raise this utter bullhockey.

Respectfully,

Dear Commissioners,

Thank you for the opportunity to testify today. My name is Huanjie Li, and I am the community engagement manager with the MinKwon Center for Community Action, a community-based organization in Flushing founded by Korean democracy activist Yoon Han Bong, with a mission to serve and empower Korean and Chinese immigrant New Yorkers and build power for all AAPI communities. I am here today to express our opposition to the proposed adoption of a so-called “jungle primary” system for New York City elections.

First, this Charter Revision process has been fundamentally inaccessible to the communities I serve. While working-class immigrants are struggling with daily survival, worried about Medicaid cuts and the threat of deportation, there has been zero city-led, in-language outreach to make us aware of this process. The commission’s report is over 100 pages and only in English, shutting out our Limited English Proficient community members. This entire process, with its rushed hearings and lack of real multi-lingual engagement, has no real consent from the people it’s supposed to benefit.

As a community organizer, I see how long-term voter education empowers immigrant voters. This proposal does the opposite; it creates chaos. We are still teaching our communities how to navigate Ranked Choice Voting. Now, there are people proposing a system where an unaffiliated voter we just educated could vote in a city primary in 2029, but then be turned away from the gubernatorial and congressional primary in 2030. Then they’ll be able to vote for the primary again, but only on half of the ballot because that will be 2032. This on-and-off eligibility will break the trust we work so hard to build, alienating our newest voters from the system. The right way to build up our community is through patient, long-term education—helping new voters understand the same political system that we have locally, statewide, and nationally, have a sense of belonging, pride, and get politically active through volunteering, organizing to form a lifelong habit of civic participation. Taking a shortcut that results in long-term disruption and confusion is not the answer.

If the commission's goal is to increase turnout, this is not the way. There is no evidence that jungle primaries boost voter participation. Look at California, where turnout has stayed almost exactly the same since 2012. In practice, open primaries have led to incumbent candidates with little or no competition calling for people to vote for a weaker opponent in the opposing party, undermining the spirit and foundation of the voting process, which is riskier in politically polarized environments. Voters across the country also dislike this system—just last year, it was rejected on the ballot in six different states. We cannot let New York City become a lab rat for a rejected experiment.

The best way to boost turnout isn't a confusing new system; it's knocking on doors, talking about issues, and moving our city elections to even years, when more people are already voting. We are open to having further democratically facilitated community conversations on how to reform the current system. But this rushed jungle primary proposal is not the answer.

I urge you to reject this proposal. Thank you.

Sincerely,
Huanjie Li

Testimony to the NYC Charter Revision Commission

Dear Members of the Commission,

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback on the proposed Charter amendments. As you consider sweeping changes to the foundational rules of our city's governance, I urge you to take community and stakeholder feedback seriously—this process is not just procedural, it is consequential. You are making decisions that will shape land use, power dynamics, and democracy in New York City for decades to come.

Question 1: Fast-Tracking Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP)

The proposal to fast-track land use applications in districts that have built the least affordable housing may appear to address equity, but I fear it misses the mark in both strategy and impact.

This is duplicative and not holistic. The City Council already passed the Fair Housing Framework, which offers a more comprehensive and balanced approach to equitable planning. It sets clear targets, considers historical disinvestment, and creates a citywide roadmap. The Charter should not undermine that work.

The proposed change assumes City Council is the problem—it's not. Council Members are already grappling with tough decisions, and removing layers of accountability won't make housing more equitable. It may just fast-track bad projects.

We should be syncing with the city's existing planning efforts, not introducing conflicting mechanisms that will increase confusion and erode trust.

Question 3: Letting BP and Mayor Propose Charter Amendments Directly

I strongly oppose the creation of a Land Use Appeals Board. This proposal fundamentally undermines the work Council Members do at the local level to negotiate land use applications, secure community benefits, and hold developers accountable. If just two people—who may not represent or answer to the impacted neighborhood—can override these decisions, then the entire ULURP process becomes meaningless.

Council Members work closely with community boards, residents, and city agencies to shape projects that reflect local needs and values. This isn't just about power—it's about trust. Creating an appeals board sends a clear message that community input is optional, not essential. That's not how you build a more equitable or effective land use system. I fear the goal of this option is to clear the way for politically motivated land use decisions.

Open Primaries

I remain strongly opposed to open primaries in New York City.

Open primaries have no place in this commission's work and feel completely out of step with its stated mission. Given we so recently changed the way we vote with Rank Choice and Fusion voting, this can further confuse voters and undermine the voter education work that has been done over the past four years. Instead of expanding participation, it risks silencing the very voices we need more of in our politics.

In a city like New York, where Democrats make up the overwhelming majority, open primaries give disproportionate influence to people who aren't part of the party and may not share its values. That's not democratic—it's distortion. These changes weaken grassroots organizing and favor the well-funded and well-known, not the bold or community-rooted. There is no turnout crisis this solves. If we're serious about improving our democracy, we should be investing in civic education, voter access, and real infrastructure—not weakening the mechanisms that give working-class and movement candidates a fighting chance.

Again, thank you for your time. The Charter is not a document to experiment with lightly. The decisions you make will fundamentally alter who has power and how it's exercised. Please treat that responsibility with the seriousness it deserves.

Sincerely,

OFFICE OF THE BROOKLYN BOROUGH PRESIDENT

ANTONIO REYNOSO

Brooklyn Borough President

Members and staff of the Charter Revision Commission,

As this process comes to a close, I want to thank you again for your thoughtful approach to addressing our city's housing crisis through Charter change. Below are my updated comments on the ballot proposals as outlined in your Interim Report:

Proposal 1: Fast Tracking Affordable Housing

I generally support the Fast Track Zoning Action, which would allow 100% income-restricted projects (as defined by a regulatory agreement) owned by HDFCs to receive approval from the Board of Standards and Appeals rather than the ULURP process. Our housing crisis is dire, and allowing affordable housing development to have its own expedited process is a smart solution.

I also support the Affordable Housing Fast Track in concept. Requiring districts to do their fair share of housing development is another critical step toward creating enough affordable housing to meet citywide needs. However, I previously recommended creating a fast track for projects that are in line with a citywide comprehensive plan. Barring that, I recommended giving community boards one year to develop a plan for how to implement Fair Housing Framework targets in their districts and fast-tracking projects that are in line with that plan. Without either provision, I have concerns about how community needs and priorities will be incorporated.

That is why I disagree with making the community boards' and borough presidents' review timelines concurrent rather than sequenced. As I mentioned in previous testimony, while I may not always agree with community boards' recommendations, their opinions always inform mine, and my recommendations benefit from having their review completed first. So at minimum, I would ask that as little time as practicable for review be split between the two. For example, the community board could have 40 days (to account for committee and full board meetings), and the BP 20 subsequent days. My office can commit to this, especially as we have already committed to expediting applications that comport with The Comprehensive Plan for Brooklyn, the recommendations of which center fair housing.

Another concern I have with both these proposals is regarding MIH. Right now, the City Council determines which MIH option is utilized. Fast Track Zoning Action projects will not have MIH mapped, and therefore we will lose the permanent affordability that MIH guarantees. I would encourage the BSA to require permanent affordability for these projects, especially on City-owned land. For projects using the Affordable Housing Fast Track that will have MIH, the developer will propose the MIH option and the CPC will approve it. I agree with concerns raised by my colleague Public Advocate Jumaane Williams at the Commission's last public hearing: the range of incomes potentially served by MIH is broad, from 40% to 130% AMI, and the CPC will need to heavily consider recommendations from the community board and borough president to ensure that their choices balance local and citywide needs.

Again, I want to thank the Commission for its creativity here and for taking steps toward comprehensive planning. Requiring the City's Ten-Year Capital Strategy to incorporate the Fair Housing Framework is a step toward the kind of comprehensive thinking that we need to support our city's growth.

Proposal 2: Simplify Review of Modest Housing and Infrastructure Projects

On this proposal, I again agree with the concepts behind it: ULURP is complicated and is certainly unnecessary for projects that strengthen our infrastructure, promote climate resiliency, or build 100% affordable housing on City-owned land. (Though in the case of acquisitions, I reiterate my recommendation that this be limited to only mission-driven, nonprofit developers who keep profits in their communities.)

However, regarding low-density projects, while I agree that they will help achieve our goals of allowing, as we said in City of Yes for Housing Opportunity, "a little more housing in every neighborhood," I worry about the potential unintended consequence of disincentivizing larger-scale development that would produce more housing. For example, when London changed its inclusionary housing threshold from 15 to 10 units, they saw a sharp increase in developments with nine units or less, leading to a loss of affordable housing. I recommend that the Commission address this by pairing Proposal 2 with incentives for larger-scale development near transit.

Additionally, I reiterate my opposition to concurrent community board and borough president review timelines.

Proposal 3: Establish and Land Use Appeals Board

Given my potential role on this Appeals Board, I want to stay away from taking a clear position for or against. I will say that I agree with the underlying assumption that we need a citywide or even boroughwide approach to our housing crisis, which is a citywide problem. I take my responsibility for doing my part to get us out of this crisis very seriously and am prepared to take a role like this very seriously as well. I also would commit to strongly considering recommendations from the communities in my borough as part of my review. I do not think that the creation of this Appeals Board would change outcomes too much, but it would address egregious situations and could help solve for the fact that there are many developers who avoid even proposing projects in certain communities because they know that the Councilmember won't support them.

Proposal 4: Modernize the City Map

On its face, a proposal to modernize the City Map has merit; however, the centralization of borough-based Topographical Bureaus currently housed within the borough presidents' offices raises significant concerns while not materially supporting the Commission's stated goals of expediting housing production or saving significant time.

The Commission's report drastically underestimates the volume of maps (it assumes there are about 8,000 citywide, when in fact there are tens of thousands of maps on record) that would need to be reintegrated into a singular system. The adoption of a new City Map would require a citywide ULURP action, provided there were material changes to the reference points and measurements of significant sections of the city that currently utilize a different mapping reference point. Further, to assess and compile the street status of every street segment in the city will require a tremendous amount of research. By placing blame on Topographical Bureaus for delays without any full accounting of procedural review, interagency coordination, or applicant errors, the Commission has demonstrated that it does not fully understand the rigor or scrutiny that map changes require.

DCP lacks critical capacity to take on a mapping project of such magnitude. As your report notes, current Topographical Bureau staff are the experts in procedure, protocol, and patterns of practice – in some cases exceeding multiple decades of direct experience that spans across many different administrations. Further, the proposed Charter language does not reconcile how DCP will maintain the expertise needed to carry out these critical functions. Given the level of expertise needed, simply allocating the work to existing planner positions would not be appropriate. And as Public Advocate Williams testified, consolidating this critical role into one agency puts it at risk of experiencing cuts or generally being unsupported and under-resourced based on the whims of one agency head or mayor.

On the issue of addressing, display, and enforcement of displayed addresses, this system is best maintained at the borough scale. While the Commission received testimony from large consulting firms on the benefits of a centralized office, many homeowners, small builders, and other impacted customers receive benefit from an accessible, well-resourced, and knowledgeable staff. Each borough addresses its buildings and other key pieces of infrastructure in accordance with the borough-system that has been established through time, practice, and codification. At times, there is intense pressure from applicants to divert from the official numbering system to cater to a particular preference. Centralizing this power into DCP would give too much influence to the mayor in determining these cases. The relative independence of the departments provides additional assurances that addressing systems can be maintained without fear of political interference.

Lastly, while the Commission indicates that after the compilation of the City Map, borough presidents could maintain a Topographical Bureau (though not be mandated to staff one nor have an engineer on staff), what this Bureau would do, exactly, is unclear. Essentially, the proposal asks BP staff to continue to do their work until such time that DCP feels they can take it over. The administrative code outlines a process by which the City Planning Commission and the mayor can direct borough presidents to update their portion of the City Map. The Commission has not addressed why this would be insufficient, nor had meaningful discussions with our offices about potential impacts to staffing, record retention, physical space needs, or other procedural limitations and milestones needed to "modernize the City Map." Further, there has been no opportunity or investment by DCP to bolster their relationship in Technical Review with staff within the borough offices.

Thank you again for your work to facilitate housing development throughout the city. I look forward to working with you on informing and educating voters about Proposals 1-3, and to the opportunity to further discuss Proposal 4.

Testimony on Ranked Choice Voting & Top Two Primary Proposal

From Rob Richie, Co-Founder of FairVote & President of Expand Democracy

I twice testified before your commission - once in the Bronx and once virtually in Staten Island. I also listened to your July 7th hearing testimony. Based on 35 years of experience in leadership roles in the American electoral reform movement, I want to share three observations:

1. VOTER TURNOUT CLARIFICATION: The commission is misinterpreting voter turnout data and projections. Voter turnout is not going down in city primaries, and almost certainly would become lower in a new “preliminary” system if Top Two were in place.
2. VIABILITY OF STRUCTURAL REFORM IN 2024: The Top Two primary proposal under consideration has become a trainwreck and would be defeated badly if put on the ballot.
3. RCV IN GENERAL ELECTIONS: Given your other laws, the single most impactful electoral reform you could put on the ballot is to extend use of ranked choice voting to general elections, as nearly proposed by the 2019 charter commission. RCV is working well in the City and goes well with laws allowing primary “sore losers” to run again. YOur Top Two proposal would relegate RCV’s use to a lower-salience “preliminary” election.

As background, I co-founded the nonpartisan organization FairVote in 1992 after two years of community leadership on electoral reform in Washington State and Ohio. I ran FairVote for 31 years until 2023. During that time I became known as the nation’s leading authority on ranked choice voting (RCV) and worked closely with groups like the Citizens Union on RCV in New York. I am now president of Expand Democracy, a nonprofit seeking to catalyze conversations about pro-democracy ideas. While consulting for groups like FairVote, Reinvent Albany and Unite America, this testimony is mine alone. I will elaborate on my three points above.

VOTER TURNOUT

- Election Experts Measure Turnout as Share of Eligible Voters
- New York City Primary Turnout is Rising – and Now Better than Boston

Repeatedly, I heard commissioners lament declines in voter turnout in primary elections and, in doing so, dismiss the impact of changes that might be affecting turnout like early voting, public financing of elections and ranked choice voting. Quite simply, they are wrong. Turnout in New York City primaries in fact is relatively healthy by U.S. standards.

Unlike what the Commission presents, voter turnout authorities do not compare turnout across eras and across jurisdictions based on the share of registered voters who participate. The number of registered voters in a given time and place can be affected by various subjective factors, including tolerance for inactive voters on the voter rolls (that is, people who have died or moved away). The nation’s most respected voter turnout authorities evaluate voter turnout in a comparative context by the percentage of eligible voters who participate- - and when that number is not available, do their analysis based on the percentage of the voting-age population that votes, ideally adjusted based on citizenship.

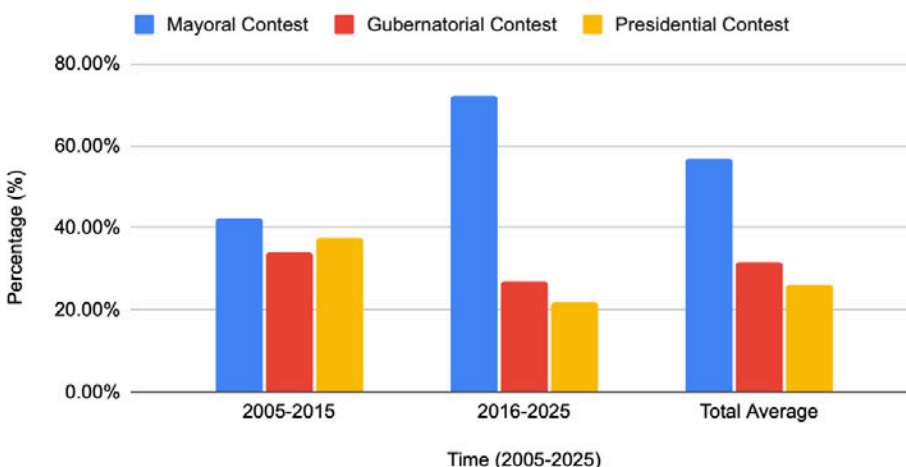

New York City's eligible voter population likely has been stable over the last 75 years. I did not find Citizen Voting Age Population projections, but this chart shows a relatively consistent number if you subtract the foreign-born population (a very loose connection to citizenship) from the overall population. That makes the total number of votes cast in an election a reasonably fair way of comparing turnout over time. Through this lens, New York City primary turnout is getting much better. The introduction of RCV is not the only voting change that might be improving turnout, but RCV's arrival clearly has come with a turnout surge. Votes cast this year are barely behind votes in the record-setting 1989 mayoral primary won by David Dinkins over Ed Koch.

Votes Cast in NYC Democratic Mayoral Primaries, 2005-2025

NYC primary turnout now compares favorably as a share of general election turnout: .City primary turnout is much better than primary turnout for governor and president. It is instructive to compare votes cast in city primaries (in this case, limited to the Democratic primary, in a closed contest) as a share of votes cast in general elections open to all voters .In the last decade (not yet counting 2025) votes cast in Democratic primaries for mayor in New York City have surged to be nearly 75% of that year's general election vote, far exceeding that share of governor and primary elections and far better than in earlier city primaries

NYC Primary Turnout as a Percentage of General Election Turnout

Boston Comparison: It is instructive to compare this trend in city primary turnout with what is going on with Boston, which has been cited by the Commission as an example of a major northeast city with a nonpartisan Top Two primary system. While Boston used to have a far closer primary-to-general election ratio than New York, that has changed. In the 2021 open seat mayoral races., New York's share was higher than Boston's. Expect 2025 data to be even more telling, given the 1,071,659 primary votes cast as of July 15.

These trends help explain why Boston lawmakers want to do what your commission did not support: use of RCV in a general election with real choices in November. While Boston has used its Top Two system for decades, this year its mayor signed a strongly backed statute to move to a Top Four system with RCV in November.

Turnout in the Mayoral Primary as a Percentage of General Election Turnout: Boston and NYC, 2009-2021

The bottom line on turnout - Build on what's working: The bottom line is that the commission should build on what is working rather than throwing out a traditional primary system altogether. What seems to be clearly boosting turnout in New York City is a ranked choice voting system that rewards candidates quite simply for talking to more voters - and for voters to learn about more candidates. While starting with the mayoral race, that behavior is happening up and down the ballot, and likely is drawing more voters to the polls. Changes with early voting and absentee voting may also be boosting turnout.

To add to what is working and to speak to the testimony you heard at hearings from unaffiliated voters, the most obvious step would be to allow unaffiliated voters to participate in primaries – that is, the semi-open primary. Similarly, turnout would be positively affected by having Election Day Registration and giving voters more time to change their party registration. Those changes may require state law changes, but they directly speak to what you heard at hearings.

Unaffiliated voters being able to vote in primaries is one thing. Using that goal to end primaries is quite another. Based on the city primary trends, on Boston data, and on my observation of low first-round turnout in other top Top Two city systems in odd-numbered years, the perverse consequence of seeking to “boost turnout” with Top Two primaries is that the lower-salience nature of the preliminary election - one that you don’t “win,” but “advance from - will in fact result in fewer votes cast from current rules. Furthermore, by reducing voter choice in November to only two candidates who often won’t connect with substantial shares of the electorate, you may well end up with lower general election turnout as well, particularly compared to approaches that embrace voter choice and RCV’s voter turnout-inducing incentives.

VIABILITY OF STRUCTURAL REFORM IN 2024

I will be blunt. From a viability perspective, the Top Two primary proposal under consideration has become a trainwreck and likely would be defeated badly if put on the ballot. I say this based on having examined all-candidate primary proposals on the ballot in 2024, 2014, 2008 and 2003. Without a greater foundation of support grounded in years of education about the change and constituency group support, all-candidate primaries are vulnerable to large shifts in voter opinion based on who supports them and who opposes them. Early opinion polls are not the same as final votes, which can explain these defeats over the years:

- Arizona Top 2 primary defeats in 2012 & 2024: Arizona voters rejected Top 2 in 2012 by 67% to 33% in 2012 and by 58% to 42% in 2024. Proponents outspent opponents.
- Oregon Top 2 defeats in 2008 & 2014: Oregon voters rejected Top 2 primaries by 66% to 34% in 2008 and by 68% to 32% in 2014. Proponents heavily outspent opponents.
- South Dakota Top 2 defeat in 2024: South Dakota voters rejected Top 2 primaries by 66% to 34% in 2024. Proponents heavily outspent opponents.
- New York City Top 2 defeat in 2003: New York City voters rejected Top 2 primaries by 70% to 30% in 2003. Opponents heavily outspent opponents.
- Colorado, Idaho, Montana and Nevada defeats of “Top X” in 2024: Voters in these states in 2024 rejected Top 4 or Top 5 primaries (paired with RCV in all but MT) in Colorado (by 54% to 46%), in Idaho (by 70% to 30%), in Montana (by 51% to 49%), and in Nevada (by 53% to 47%). Proponents heavily outspent opponents in every contest.

Instructively, Top Two primaries for partisan elections have only passed in Washington in 2004 and in California in 2010. Notably voters in both states had had recent experience with a “blanket primary” where voters were able to vote for “any candidate in any primary” before that rule was struck down by the Supreme Court in 2000. The only other “Top X” win was a narrow victory in Alaska in 2020, where many voters also had had an experience with a blanket primary ballot (most parties allowed it voluntarily). Notably, New York City voters have had no such experience with different primary rules in New York elections.

Furthermore, a huge problem with your decision to focus on a Top Two primary is that it unsurprisingly creates opposition from major constituencies that might have been on board with other reforms. The core problem with Top Two as your proposed solution is that it narrows voter choice in November. I will summarize who will have good reasons to oppose Top Two:

Republican voters Republicans will go from having a system where they always can have a candidate on the November ballot to one where they may go decades without a November mayoral candidate. That outcome would diminish their brand and affect down ballot races where Republicans are currently competitive. That means that not only organized Republicans, but grassroots Republican voters will be highly motivated to vote against change.

Minor party organizations and voters: Minor parties are in an even worse position with Top Two. They may not be a major segment of the electorate, but they will be highly motivated to oppose Top Two and prepared to file lawsuits based on denied ballot access.

Democratic and Republican Party organizations: The parties nearly always fight hard against nonpartisan primaries, as they no longer can nominate candidates.

Groups that gain power through organizing in primary electorates: New York City has a great deal of wealth, as indicated by PACs backing Andrew Cuomo spending $35 million in the primary this year. The more grassroots-focused groups can push back against this money through public financing and through focusing on the primary electorate under current rules.

Women and people of color doing well as candidates: New York City has an historic number of women on its city council, surging from 13 to 31 after introduction of ranked choice voting in 2021. People of color are also at an all-time high. Going to a Top Two system where negative ads have their peak influence in binary runoff contests would logically be seen as threatening this progress. Indeed, leading women's representation groups now oppose Top 2.

A BETTER APPROACH: RANKED CHOICE VOTING IN GENERAL ELECTIONS, IDEALLY WITH SEMI-OPEN PRIMARIES

In past testimony, I have accepted your frame of proposing an all-candidate primary. Within that frame, Top Four primaries would be far better than Top Two, especially in a City where ranked choice voting is working well and is popular with voters. Top Four with RCV in November would have more reliably resulted in competitive elections in November, allowed more voters to have a favorite candidate on the November ballot, and reduced the impact of big money that is most potent in head-to-head runoffs when negative ads have their greatest power. Your decision to reject Top Four and instead focus on Top Two is disappointing and invites cynicism about whether you are elevating the interests of those able to move big money in campaigns over the interests of voters who by every measure would benefit more from a Top Four system.

But this year's mayoral election shows clearly that you have another option: you would achieve great progress in City elections by extending RCV to the November election. Notably, the 2019 charter commission only narrowly failed to advance this proposal to the ballot. This year's elections will have the Democratic nominee Zohran Mamdani, the Democratic primary's second-place finisher Andrew Cuomo running as an independent, the Republican nominee Curtis Sliwa, the incumbent mayor Eric Adams running as an independent, along with other independent and minor party candidates. That group almost certainly includes the candidates who would have emerged from a Top Four primary this year even as Democrats were able to

This approach makes eminent sense in a City with all the infrastructure to use RCV. A Common Cause New York- FairVote - SurveyUSA exit poll this year found that 96% of voters found RCV simple and 76% want to keep or expand it, as opposed to only 17% against its use in City elections. RCV is working well. First, we know voter turnout is only 10,000 votes short of an all-time record of votes cast in a City primary, as of July 15;. Second, we know that some 95% of voters in the first round had their ballot count for either Mamdani or Cuomo in the final round rather than only 80% if it had been plurality. Third, we soon will see how voters handled ranking candidates, knowing that 99.7% cast valid mayoral primary ballots in its first use in 2021. Fourth, women again look likely to win 31 of 51 City Council races, and candidates of color again have done well.

Without RCV, the general election in the City is a mess. Candidates like Andrew Cuomo and Jim Walden are suggesting a contorted, unenforceable process of candidates voluntarily stepping back from the general election in September if not the best positioned to win, even as their names will have to remain on the ballot. Far more sensible would be to allow voters to sort things out in general elections with RCV, as they do in the primaries.

This approach of RCV in the primary followed by RCV in the general is how Maine structures its elections for the U.S. Senate and U.S. House and how the legislature would like to use it for governor and state legislature if legal questions can be answered relating to an obscure provision in the Maine constitution. It is how the County of Arlington, Virginia, has landed on using RCV, with overwhelming votes of support of the County Council after pilot uses for primaries and general elections.

Adding RCV to the general election would very likely win easily on the ballot. In Washington, D.C, voters in 2024 passed the use of RCV in primaries and general elections by 73% to 27%, including wins in every single precinct and by greater than two to one in every single city council ward. Nearly all the constituency groups that will fight against Top Two primaries (as explained above) will likely accept or strongly suppose use of RCV in November.

Here are particulars relating to this proposal to use RCV in November:

Providing access to the primary ballot for unaffiliated voters: I recommend that New York City follow New Mexico's recent lead and establish semi-open primaries – or, at the very least, change the timeline for when voters can change their party registration. Based on the Washington, DC ballot measure in 2024 to adopt RCV and semi-open primaries, this proposal would likely have strong voter support. Such a change would mean more voters, especially younger voters who are disproportionately registering as unaffiliated (including more than 35% of black and Latino men under 35), could vote in primaries that still would be exciting contests with nomination winners chosen in participation-boosting RCV elections.

Embracing how “sore losers” can run in November in New York: Nearly every state in the country denies the November ballot to candidates who contest and lose a party primary. By allowing such candidates to run again, New York allows the kind of candidates that might benefit from a Top Two or Top Four primary system to get to the November ballot without denying parties the chance to hold a primary to pick their nominees.

Use aggregated fusion to handle fusion nominations with RCV in November: New York and Connecticut are the only states in the nation where candidates are allowed to be listed separately with each party nomination they earn, and it is highly unlikely that any state will join them through the political process. But I see allowing more association on the ballot as valuable and support “aggregated fusion.” As used in Oregon and Vermont, aggregated fusion is where candidate names appear once, with each nomination they have listed by their name. Parties like the Conservative Party and Working Families Party could still meaningfully offer nominations that, over time, could be shown to benefit candidates with their nomination if it means they earn more votes due to having that additional nomination. Furthermore, the addition of RCV avoids these parties being trapped into almost never running their own candidates. With RCV, they would have greater freedom to make that decision to run their own candidate.

With aggregated fusion, RCV in November would be as easy or perhaps even easier with voters than its use in primaries because there would be more information on the ballot about each candidate.

No substantive effect on the City’s public financing system: Using RCV in November would be unlikely to have more than a minimal impact on the City’s public financing system; the only change would be if some candidates decide to run because they won’t be tagged as “spoilers” as they are in the current system that of course does result in “spoilers.”

How to handle candidate withdrawal: Election law professor Jerry Goldfeder recently published an article recently with astute suggestions for how to handle candidate withdrawal that seem smart to pursue under whatever system is used in New York City.

Conclusion:

By instituting ranked choice voting in its primary and through state laws improving voter access, New York City has experienced a surge of voter interest and voter participation in primary elections. The most viable reform that would comprehensively improve City elections is to add RCV to general elections, ideally in tandem with moves to make it legal or at least easier for unaffiliated voters to vote in primaries. I urge the Commission to set aside Top 2 primaries in favor of this approach to reform, either by putting it on the November ballot or recommending it for action by the next charter commission convened in the City.

Comments: Dear Commissioners, On behalf of the APA VOICE coalition, we are here today to oppose the jungle primary proposal and to instead offer a more sensible, long-term solution. APA VOICE is a coalition of over 15 organizations that fight to increase civic participation and build political power for New York City's AAPI and immigrant communities. Our position comes from extensive discussion among our partners, who have been on the front lines of civic engagement for decades in our growing and diverse communities. Commissioners, this entire process has felt like a conversation behind closed doors without the participation of the voters who stand to be impacted.. Decisions are being made about our communities without our communities. While our people navigate immense daily pressures and uncertainties regarding immigration and Medicaid, there has been no serious, city-funded effort to bring this complex issue to them in their own languages. We were handed a dense, English-only report and told to respond on a timeline that disrespects the deep engagement required for true democratic consent. The proposed "jungle primary" would create a confusing patchwork of systems for our voters. We are teaching people how to use a ranked-choice ballot properly. During the past primary, we consistently heard from both community members and interpreters that many voters are still confused by RCV, four years after it was first implemented. Now, you want to introduce a system that would create inconsistency by welcoming an unaffiliated voter into a primary one year, only to shut them out for a different office the next. Eventually, if city-wide primaries are moved to even years and are on the same ballot as state and federal elections, some voters will only be able to vote on half the ballot due to their party affiliation. This doesn't build confidence; it erodes the very trust our organizations work for years to establish with new immigrant Americans. Furthermore, communicating any election reform often falls on the shoulders of community-based organizations like ours. In reality, we are the ones who create the multilingual guides, host the workshops, and answer the confused, urgent phone calls. This work requires time, expertise, and most importantly, significant resources and city funding. A reform this significant requires a thoughtful plan and a real investment in community education. Rushing it onto the ballot now bypasses that necessary work and disrespects voters by setting the stage for mass confusion. According to the report commissioned by this body, 19.2% of unaffiliated voters are Asian, compared to 11.4% of all registered voters. This is not largely an expression of political preference—it is a reflection of a system that is already incredibly confusing for new Americans. We hear it all the time: "If I enroll in a party now, do I have to vote for them in November?"; "If I'm with a party, is this for life?" It is heartbreaking to see someone excited about a candidate get turned away at the polls because they didn't know about a February 14th deadline. It's also heartbreaking because, due to a lack of information or traumatic political experiences from their home countries, our political system is losing potential donors, volunteers, and passionate advocates. We are robbing our families of the opportunity to instill a culture of civic pride and party involvement—an opportunity that generations of American-born citizens have taken advantage of. So, let's solve the actual problem with a more sensible solution: allow voters who have never been affiliated with a party before to enroll on Election Day and have them vote on a regular ballot, rather than an affidavit ballot that won't be counted. This welcomes new voters into the system, instead of rejecting their first attempt to participate. This also allows voters to be incorporated into our political party system, giving them the opportunity to gain a better understanding of it through volunteering, organizing, and direct party outreach, without imposing a confusing new primary system upon them. What is the rush for a jungle primary? Proponents claim it will increase turnout, but the evidence from other states shows this is a false promise. Turnout in California has not significantly changed since they adopted it, and voters in six other states have already rejected this very idea at the ballot box. Why would New York volunteer to be a test subject for a flawed concept? It only causes chaos and cuts our communities off from targeted voter outreach. We need our new voters to understand what the parties stand for, because that's where power lies at the state and national levels. The path to a stronger democracy is not through confusing, rushed proposals. It's through patient voter education, grassroots outreach, and working with community organizations as true partners with the resources we need. We urge you to reject the "jungle-primary" proposal and instead start the reform process by adopting a less confusing, more effective solution first, like allowing never-affiliated voters to vote in primaries and get affiliated on the same day. Thank you.

Sincerely, APA VOICE Coalition

Dear Commissioners,

On behalf of the APA VOICE coalition, we are here today to oppose the jungle primary proposal and to instead offer a more sensible, long-term solution.

APA VOICE is a coalition of over 15 organizations that fight to increase civic participation and build political power for New York City's AAPI and immigrant communities. Our position comes from extensive discussion among our partners, who have been on the front lines of civic engagement for decades in our growing and diverse communities.

According to the report commissioned by this body, 19.2% of unaffiliated voters are Asian, compared to 11.4% of all registered voters. This is not largely an expression of political preference—it is a reflection of a system that is already incredibly confusing for new Americans. We hear it all the time: "If I enroll in a party now, do I have to vote for them in November?"; "If I'm with a party, is this for life?" It is heartbreaking to see someone excited about a candidate get turned away at the polls because they didn't know about a February 14th deadline. It's also heartbreaking because, due to a lack of information or traumatic political experiences from their home countries, our political system is losing potential donors, volunteers, and passionate advocates. We are robbing our families of the opportunity to instill a culture of civic pride and party involvement—an opportunity that generations of American-born citizens have taken advantage of.

So, let's solve the actual problem with a more sensible solution: allow voters who have never been affiliated with a party before to enroll on Election Day and have them vote on a regular ballot, rather than an affidavit ballot that won't be counted. This welcomes new voters into the system, instead of rejecting their first attempt to participate. This also allows voters to be incorporated into our political party system, giving them the opportunity to gain a better understanding of it through volunteering, organizing, and direct party outreach, without imposing a confusing new primary system upon them.

What is the rush for a jungle primary? Proponents claim it will increase turnout, but the evidence from other states shows this is a false promise. Turnout in California has not significantly changed since they adopted it, and voters in six other states have already rejected this very idea at the ballot box. Why would New York volunteer to be a test subject for a flawed concept? It only causes chaos and cuts our communities off from targeted voter outreach. We need our new voters to understand what the parties stand for, because that's where power lies at the state and national levels.

The path to a stronger democracy is not through confusing, rushed proposals. It's through patient voter education, grassroots outreach, and working with community organizations as true partners with the resources we need.

We urge you to reject the "jungle-primary" proposal and instead start the reform process by adopting a less confusing, more effective solution first, like allowing never-affiliated voters to vote in primaries and get affiliated on the same day. Thank you.

Sincerely,

APA VOICE Coalition

Hello,

As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Thank you,

Comments: I care deeply about election integrity and voter choice. I urge you to reject the proposal supported by mayor Eric Adams, to switch New York City to a "jungle primary" or open primary. This change promises nothing good in the primary and will dilute the voices of people of color and other minorities, and of course young voters. It will prevent people who have a shared allegiance to certain political ideals from make their choice without having to face off against those with highly opposing voices and often much more money. It treats political affiliations as meaningless to governance, but mayors are leaders, not just managers. Save that contest of dueling views for elections, not primaries! There has been no serious public discussion of a change in the primary system, and that is no way to respect the will of the people. It is a self-serving move by a mayor who jumped from one party to no party or the opposite party because he knew he would not win the nomination. It is self-serving, not people-serving. Members and staff of the Charter Revision Commission:

I applaud the Commission for identifying ways to make New York City government work better, including reforms to improve the promotion of abundant and affordable housing through the regulation of land use.

I write with respect to the proposed amendments to the Charter of the City of New York, regarding the City Map.

I'm a scholar of the history of architecture and real estate development in Brooklyn, often using the City Map and records of the Brooklyn Borough President's Topographical Bureau in my own research.

I've written about the historical development of the Brooklyn street map itself – for example, see “Brooklyn’s Big Street Address Mess: A Wild Tale of Total Civic Dysfunction” (The New York Times, January 27, 2021, available at <https://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2021/01/27/nyregion/brooklyn-streets-numbers-renaming.html>).

I'm also the President of the Brooklyn Heights Association, and a non-trustee member of the Center for Brooklyn History Committee of the Brooklyn Public Library Board of Trustees. However, I'm submitting these comments on my own behalf.

I echo many aspects of the written testimony previously received by the Charter Revision Commission from certain Borough Presidents and Community Boards.

Specifically, I agree that digitization of the City Map as a general matter is a worthwhile goal. And I agree that many of the current problems in the land use process related to the antiquated and distributed City Map, identified in the various reports of the Commission, have the potential to be solved or improved through a Digital City Map.

But, I must emphasize that the proposed Charter amendments don't define what digitization means, nor what data a Digital City Map will include.

Therefore, instead of giving unlimited discretion to the Department of City Planning (DCP) to self-define these aspects of the updated City Map, any proposed Charter amendments should ensure DCP undertakes a process which involves the following:

- preserve institutional knowledge of each borough Topographical Bureau, including the records maintained in each office and interpretation of the often-cryptic metadata contained on the paper maps;
- preserve the current mapping conventions that are unique to each borough, instead of forcing an unnecessary centralization solution that creates more inconsistencies than it eliminates;
- prevent data loss during the digitization process by referencing ALL aspects of the current “map” (i.e. those other records in each Topo Office related to street openings, closings, legal status, deeds etc. that are not actually maps); and

- maintain the paper maps and other records of each Topo Office AFTER digitization in a form and place available to land use professionals, property researchers and the general public (either in continuing Topo Offices, an archival function of DCP, or through the Municipal Archives).

On this last point, let me tell a cautionary story. At the culmination of the old City of Brooklyn's long process to standardize its street numbering system in 1870, the municipality created a "Rosetta Stone" map which converted between old and new street numbers. Yet due to carelessness or intentional neglect, this map wasn't preserved after the renumbering process was completed. This loss makes it difficult or even impossible in some cases to accurately research the history of streets in Brooklyn as they existed before 1870.

Therefore, it's essential that DCP maintain archive of the existing paper City Map records. The new Digital City Map will indeed make the land use process in the city more speedy and efficient. But there are other functions of the current City Map that undoubtedly will still require review of the paper records for some time to come even after digitization.

Thank you for the opportunity to submit these comments.

Sincerely,

Jeremy Lechtzin

Comments: As a New Yorker committed to real democracy and fair elections, I urge you to oppose Eric Adams' proposal to move New York City to a so-called "jungle primary." This change, being pushed without meaningful public input, would weaken the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, reduce youth turnout. New York City should not overhaul its election system. Please respect the will of the people and keep our primaries intact. Thank you, Jordan Ellis

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing to submit testimony opposing the proposal to replace New York City's current primary system with a so-called "jungle primary."

As a New Yorker who values fair elections and accountable government, I believe this proposal threatens to undermine democratic participation in our city. Moving to a nonpartisan "jungle primary" would reduce representation for Black and Brown communities and depress turnout among younger voters who already face obstacles to engaging in our political process.

This proposed change is being advanced without sufficient public debate or meaningful community input. It appears designed not to strengthen democracy.

New York City deserves an inclusive, representative electoral process that encourages participation from all communities. I urge you to reject this attempt to impose an undemocratic primary system and to preserve our existing structure, which better reflects the will of the people.

Thank you for considering my testimony.

Good afternoon, and thank you for your attention.

As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary."

During our 2025 Mayoral elections, Eric Adams chose to drop out of the Democratic Party line for the primary contest. He understands how his lack of credibility, popularity, and low public opinion rating (earned during his tenure as Mayor of NYC) undermine his ambitions. Eric Adams is not fit to decide how elections are facilitated in the future.

This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Thank you,

Comments: I would like to state my strong support for Proposals 1-5. They are well considered ideas that if implemented would improve the lives all New Yorkers. I strongly urge the Commission to put these proposals to the great people of New York this coming November. Please find my longer testimony in the attached document.

Dear Charter Revision Commission,

Thank you for this opportunity to comment on the proposed 2025 Charter Revisions.

As a current Brooklyn resident, I'm writing to express my strong support for Proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. I believe these reforms will make New York City more affordable and democratically representative.

From 2010 to 2023, New York averaged about 22,000 new homes each year—less than a third of 1920s rates. With demand far outpacing supply, just 1.4% of apartments are vacant, rents are rising seven times faster than wages, and record numbers of our neighbors are sleeping in shelters or on the street. New York will not be able to survive this level of vacancy, it will force out those who cannot afford to stay, push people into homelessness, slow growth, damage the tax base, and generally leave NYC a weaker version of itself.

I support Proposals 1-4 to fast-track affordable housing, simplify review, strike a better balance in the land use process, and digitize the City Map. The city's housing shortage demands bold action.

- Proposal 1 would make it easier and faster to produce affordable housing, lowering costs and ensuring that all neighborhoods contribute to solving this crisis. This reform is long overdue and essential to reversing the tide of displacement.
- Proposal 2 would streamline the approval process for smaller rezonings that add housing, protect against flooding, and create open space. These are exactly the kinds of projects that should not be delayed by red tape, and this proposal would allow the city to respond more nimbly to urgent infrastructure and climate needs.
- The current system of member deference gives individual councilmembers outsized power to block citywide priorities. Proposal 3's new Appeals Board would ensure that development decisions reflect borough-wide and citywide considerations- not just the narrowest political interests. This will better serve the needs of our multi-cultural, growing, and diverse city.
- A unified City Map is a step in the right direction, since the current system can impose significant costs and time on infrastructure, housing, and other projects. Proposal 4's Digital City Map would allow processes that today take months or even years to occur nearly instantly.

I also support considering Open New York's recommendations for a fairer and more affordable NYC, many of which are already very well-aligned with the commission's proposals. I encourage the commission to dedicate additional time to exploring Open New York's proposal to bring the housing shortage into landmarks decisions.

Proposal 5 is a no-brainer: moving local elections to even years would save the city money and dramatically increase turnout, especially among younger voters, working-class communities, and voters of color. This reform would help ensure that the voices shaping local government reflect the full diversity of our city.

I urge the Commission to put these five measures on the November ballot so that voters can weigh in, and to use every lever at its disposal to streamline the approval of new homes

Sincerely,

Luke Hein Martin

NYC Council Member Carmen De La Rosa's
Testimony to the Charter Revision Commission

July 15, 2025

Thank you Chair Buery Jr. and members of the Charter Revision Commission for the opportunity to provide testimony.

As the Council Member representing District 10 encompassing the communities of Washington Heights, Inwood, and Marble Hill in Northern Manhattan, I fully understand the desire and intention to address the housing crisis our city is facing by expediting the process by which we build truly affordable housing. I can also assure you that this City Council is not an obstacle to addressing the housing crisis, we are a critical partner.

My district in Upper Manhattan underwent a large-scale rezoning in 2018 under the previous mayoral administration. While Inwood NYC did yield some deeply affordable housing and numerous community benefits, the process was deeply flawed as it lacked serious environmental and racial impact studies. One of the biggest lessons we drew from that process is that we must allow for deeper review and community input. I believe the NYC Council and the local Council Member must play a central role in bringing in the community and ensuring accountability and transparency. With the passing of the Inwood NYC plan came a list of demands, one that constituents could hold their leaders to account, and preserve the identity of the area without exacerbating mass displacement.

In the past, the role of the City Council in the land use process has been fruitful in providing community centers, accessibility, affordability, local funding, small business solutions, childcare, libraries, increased transit options, and so much more. I share the same commitment as the rest of my colleagues in supporting the creation of much needed affordable housing for the working class that contributes to our city. However, eliminating Council input will only remove power directly from the people of the City of New York and will not help with building community support and trust in local governments.

Shifting more power to the Mayor's office can undermine the success in confronting the city's housing crisis through negotiations, limiting power to one side of the checks and balances, eliminating the hyper-local lens of the millions of New Yorkers the Council collectively represents.

We urge you to take consider other solutions to improve the land use process while maintaining community at its core:

- Accelerate Pre-ULURP reviews to get more projects moving faster
- Ease ULURP requirements for resiliency-related land use applications that are currently being overlooked because of the challenges and expense of proceeding through the ULURP process.
- Strengthen the Council and Speaker's ability to advance land use approvals in the public interest of the City's need for housing and overcome political obstruction.
- Enact reforms that strengthen the power of the Fair Housing Framework law by increasing accountability measures for community districts that do not meet the law's fair housing targets by requiring land use changes that advance compliance.
- Expand public education and engagement on housing and land use, and reform processes to increase the inclusion of input from residents without secure and stable housing, who are too often underrepresented in the public review process
- Address the lack of capacity of DCP to advance neighborhood planning and rezoning efforts that produce housing and within housing agencies that slows post-ULURP housing production.
- Constrain post-approval discretionary power of the mayor to interfere and overturn housing and development projects approved through ULURP.

Council Members care deeply about the effects of development on their constituents because we are the front line of local government. We live in our communities, care for our neighbors, fund local initiatives and collaborate with Mayoral agencies to improve quality of life for New Yorkers. The City Council should not be silenced. The Council's input is crucial in the development of better, more community-oriented projects that better serve our people. We urge you not to move forward with ballot proposals 1-3 in their current form and consider alternative solutions to enhance the land use process.

Comments: Dear CRC, This comment is my written testimony. As a low income family, we are only able to live in NYC because of the Mitchell-Lama program. For us there is no housing crisis, only an affordable housing crisis. I agree with the written testimony which says:"The City Council is the people's voice and must not be limited, especially in zoning questions which affect our neighbor-hoods and lives." I oppose the creation of a New Appeals Board made up of the borough president, City Council speaker, and the mayor, which would have the power to reverse the Council's decision on a land use application with a two-thirds majority vote. Such an appeals board would overcome member deference decisions but is inherently anti-democratic. Also, democracy is slow. The City is best served by more mandatory public hearings not fast tracking the ULURP process. I also oppose ending party primaries and having jungle primaries, although I would favor a many party system to a two party system Thank you for this opportunity to submit my testimony.

WORKING FAMILIES PARTY

Dear Commissioners.

I serve as the General Counsel to the Working Families Party of New York State. I have been practicing election law in New York for close to 20 years. I write to draw your attention to serious concerns with changes to the municipal primary election system that the Commission is considering proposing to the voters of New York City. Specifically, both “jungle” primaries (in which all candidates appear on a single primary ballot identified by their party affiliation, and the top two or top four candidates advance to the general election, regardless of party) and open primaries (in which any voter may participate in any party’s primary election) would violate longstanding principles of New York constitutional law.

It is a hallmark of New York elections that political parties have the right to choose which candidate will be their standard-bearer. Under our hallmark system of fusion voting, this is true whether or not the candidate is a member and/or nominee of another party. In New York elections, cross-endorsed candidates appear multiple times on a General Election ballot, on each separate line of every party that nominated them. Fusion voting yields practical benefits. Voters can cast their vote on the line of the party that they feel best represents their interests, knowing that their votes will be tallied together in their candidate’s final count. This system fights polarization by allowing parties with different priorities to form coalitions around the same, mutually-agreeable candidates. It allows more opportunities for meaningful voter participation, by allowing voters who may not identify with or agree with the principles of a major party to cast a meaningful vote for a candidate who can actually win, as opposed to a protest or spoiler vote for a non-viable independent.

The Commission is considering proposing a revision of the New York City Charter to open party primary elections to all voters, or to create a single primary election whose top two or top four candidates would go on to the General (commonly called a “jungle primary”). In an open primary system, the members of a party would lose control over the choice of who would be the party’s nominee. In the standard jungle primary system, both the primary and general elections would be partisan, in that each candidate would appear with the label of the party in which they were enrolled. Under this formulation, candidates could not appear more than once on the Primary or General ballot, and therefore could not appear with the separate labels of more than one party. Either way, this system would very clearly violate the New York State Constitution’s protections of fusion voting.

Fusion Voting is Protected by the New York State Constitution

The New York State Court of Appeals has repeatedly and unequivocally held that the New York State Constitution guarantees voters, candidates and political parties the right to participate in a system of fusion voting. The Court’s words leave no doubt, and the history of their decisions is instructive.

In 1910, in the Matter of Callahan, the Court of Appeals struck down a new law that prohibited some types of party committees from nominating any candidate who was already the nominee of another Party (200 NY 59). In the Court’s decision, Chief Justice Cullen and Justice Gray affirmed that the state “cannot enact arbitrary exclusions from candidacy for office” and asked “What exclusion could be more arbitrary than that one party or organization should not be permitted to nominate the candidate of another.” They likened such an exclusion to a law prohibiting the nomination of red-headed candidates. Ultimately, the court found, the state legislature had no power “to forbid such fusions and combinations as the electors choose to make.”

The next year, Tammany Hall was reeling from municipal elections in New York City, in which a fusion ticket ousted the machine from control of the City Council. In response, the Tammany-controlled delegation to the state legislature took steps to curtail the effectiveness of minor parties and fusion tickets at the ballot box. Unable simply to ban fusion, the legislature enacted a statute that, among its provisions, prohibited the names of candidates from appearing twice on the ballot. Instead, a candidate’s name would appear only on the line of the party appearing first on the ballot. Any subsequent party line that would also otherwise include the candidate’s name would instead simply say ‘See Column A’ or B, referring the voter to the line of the (presumably major) party in which the candidate’s name appeared.

The Court of Appeals considered this statute in 1911’s Hopper v. Britt (203 NY 144). Agreeing with Citizen’s Union that the statute was unconstitutional, the Court again affirmed that the legislature “cannot forbid coalition nominations or indirectly effect the same thing by rendering it more difficult to vote for a coalition nominee.” Writing again for the Court, Chief Justice Cullen noted that “the otherwise plenary power of the legislature to prescribe the method of conducting elections cannot be so exercised as to disenfranchise constitutionally qualified electors, and any system of election that unnecessarily prevents the elector... from voting for the candidate of his choice violates the Constitution.”

The Court has since revisited and reaffirmed the Constitution’s absolute protection of fusion voting. In the 1973 case Devane v. Touhey, the Court of Appeals considered a statute that prohibited most candidates from receiving the nomination of both a party and an independent body (33 NY2d 48). Striking down this law, the Court again cited Callahan’s statement – which it described as “prophetic” – that no exclusion from candidacy could be more arbitrary than a ban on fusion voting, and reaffirmed that no law may “prevent a qualified elector from exercising his constitutional right to vote for a candidate and party of his choice.”

The New York State Constitution Protects Closed Partisan Primaries

While over a century of Court of Appeals case law has made it clear that our system of fusion voting enjoys the protection of the state Constitution, the same cases stand for the principle that only a party’s members may choose its nominee. In Callahan, the Court found that, equal to the right of the electors to vote for whom they will for public office, “any body of the electors has the right to choose whom it will for its candidate for office” (emphasis added). Opening partisan primaries to all voters would strip away parties’ rights to choose their own candidates.

It is notable that the Commission may propose taking away the rights of party members to support the choices - not the rights - of unaffiliated voters. The Commission has heard testimony, which Commission members have echoed, that partisan primaries “disenfranchise” voters who choose not to enroll in a political party. The Albany County Supreme Court addressed this choice in 1947’s Ingersoll v. Curran, another fusion case (70 NYS2d 435). In that case, the court noted that it might be argued that the rights of a person who will be qualified to vote at the general election has been invaded by his statutory preclusion from participating in a party primary election. This preclusion is not an invasion of the rights of such a voter. It is a situation which under his right of free choice he elected to occupy.

There are several simple solutions available to voters who do not feel an affinity with an existing political party. First, they may form an independent body and work to qualify it for office. The set of parties on the ballot is hardly set in stone: Since 1998, six independent bodies have achieved party status in New York. Unaffiliated voters may also join an existing political party and work to push it in a direction they agree with more. Finally, they may nominate independent candidates and vote for them in the general election. It is notable that the upcoming mayoral election will feature three independent candidates, giving unaffiliated voters a broad selection of candidates from which to choose.

It is simply incorrect to say that our primary system disenfranchises “independent” voters. These voters are hardly disenfranchised, and to the extent that their ability to choose a party candidate is limited, it is their choices, and not our system, that imposes that limit. These choices do not justify stripping party members of the right to choose their own candidates.

Conclusion

Commissioners, pursuant to section 10 of the Public Officers law, you swore an oath to uphold the Constitution of the State of New York. The Court of Appeals has made it clear time and again that fusion voting and the right of parties to choose their candidates enjoy the absolute protection of the constitution you swore to uphold.

No provision of New York’s Municipal Home Rule Law allows New York City to adopt a charter provision that violates the state constitution. I understand that you are hearing from some jungle primary advocates that fusion can somehow be saved in this system, perhaps by a separate election law change at the state level that affects the timing of minor party nominations and allows them the consolation prize of choosing to sit out the General Election or cross nominate one of the top Primary candidates. Even if this truly upheld the right of a minor party to choose any candidate as its standard-bearer (and it does not), this Commission cannot rely on a hoped-for change by the State Legislature to cure Constitutional defects in its proposals. Consistent with your oath of office, this Commission simply may not recommend that the City ban or even burden our longstanding system of fusion voting.

For your convenience, I have attached the cases I cited.

Very Truly Yours,

200 N.Y. 59 *; 93 N.E. 262 **; 1910 N.Y. LEXIS 1419 ***

In the Matter of the Application of Patrick E. Callahan, Appellant, to Review a Determination of the Secretary of State of the State of New York. Garret J. Garretson et al., Respondents

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the second judicial department, entered October 19, 1910, which affirmed an order of Special Term confirming the decision of the secretary of state in overruling objections to a certificate of nomination filed by the Independence League party and nominating Garret J. Garretson, Samuel T. Maddox and Harrington Putnam for the office of justices of the Supreme Court.

Matter of Callahan, 140 App. Div. 897, affirmed.

Syllabus

The provisions of section 136 of the Election Law (Cons. Laws, ch. 17), forbidding a committee of any party or independent body authorized either to make nominations or to fill vacancies to nominate a candidate of another party or independent body for the same office, are invalid and unconstitutional.

The facts, so far as material, are stated in the dissenting opinion.

Counsel: Edward M. Shepard, William N. Dykman, William F. Hagarty and Maurice V. Theall for appellant. The Election Law expressly prohibits both the nomination by committee of nominees already named by another political [***2] party and the substitution of candidates already named to fill vacancies by committee. (Cons. Laws, ch. 17, §§ 120, 121, 133, 135, 136; Matter of Gillespie v. McDonough, 39 Misc. Rep. 147.)

Robert Stewart and Eugene L. N. Young for respondents. The nomination in question by the committee of the judicial convention of the Independence League is an original nomination. (Matter of Gillespie v. McDonough, 39 Misc. Rep. 147.) In construing the part of the Election Law herein referred to the doctrine of practical construction should be applied, to wit: That where a course of conduct or line of action under a statute has been observed by public officers for a long period, acquiesced in by all concerned, and never questioned in the courts, a practical construction is put upon the statute which the courts will not disturb. (People ex rel. Einsfeld v. Murray, 149 N. Y. 376; Matter of W. S. R. Co., 115 N. Y. 442.)

[*60] [**262] While I think the decision of the courts below could well be sustained on the ground of long acquiescence by the public and legislature in the interpretation of section 136 of the Election Law, declared by Mr. Justice Bischoff in Matter of Gillespie v. McDonough \(39 Misc. Rep. 147\), and while I agree in the opinion of my brother Gray on that question, I wish to place my vote on a broader ground. In my opinion the provisions of section 136 forbidding a committee of any party or independent body authorized either to make nominations or to fill vacancies to nominate a candidate of another party or independent body for the same office are plainly invalid and unconstitutional. I shall not discuss the extent of the power of the legislature to regulate elections other than to say that concededly the power must be so exercised as not to deny or impair the rights of the electors. I [*61] shall assume that the legislature may prescribe in what [***4] manner and by what bodies nominations for office may be made. I will assume also that the legislature might have refused to grant committees of parties or of independent bodies the power to make nominations at all, but have required all nominations to be made by conventions. The proposition which I assert is this: That if the legislature does grant to any convention, committee or body the right to make nominations, it cannot limit the right of such convention, committee or body to nominate as its candidate any person who is qualified for the office. The electors have the right to vote for whom they will for public office, and this right cannot be denied them by any legislation. (People ex rel. Bradley v. Shaw, 133 N. Y. 493; People ex rel. Goring v. President, etc., of Wappinger Falls, 144 id. 616.) Equally, any body of the electors has the right to choose whom it will for its candidate for office and to appeal to the whole electorate for votes in his behalf. If the legislature has the constitutional power to prevent a committee of a party from nominating as its own candidate a candidate already in nomination by another party or body, it may equally, if it sees [***5] fit, forbid a convention from making such a nomination. It is true that the legislature may prescribe qualifications for office where there is no constitutional provision on the subject, but it has been settled law from the earliest period in the history of our state that it cannot enact arbitrary exclusions from office. ([Barker v. \[\*\*263\] People, 3 Cow. 686](#); Rathbone v. Wirth, 150 N. Y. 459; People ex rel. Devery v. Coler, 173 N. Y. 103.) If it cannot enact arbitrary exclusions from office, equally it cannot enact arbitrary exclusions from candidacy for office. What exclusion could be more arbitrary than that one party or organization should not be permitted to nominate the candidate of another. For years the great popular outcry has been against the domination of partisanship in the election of administrative and judicial officers. To some extent the voters have felt the effect of the popular demand, especially this has been the case in this state in reference to the judiciary. For the past nine [*62] years every member of this court has been elected on the common nomination of the two great political parties. The same was the case with [***6] the election this year, but under the construction of the statute contended for by the appellant, assuming its validity, the candidate of the party which made the latest nomination was not entitled to a place on the ticket of the other party because that party had first held its convention and intrusted the nomination to one of the vacancies to a committee in the hope that there might be presented to the electors two common nominees worthy of the support of all the people and thus avoid division on partisan lines. Personally, I should think it a subject for public congratulation that a candidate was so well qualified for the office he sought as to command the support of other political bodies. But I do not base my argument at all on the claim that the legislation operates against non-partisanship; that may seem to me an objection, but to others not an objection. I insist that the legislature has not the right to legislate so as to induce either partisan voting or independent voting. The liberty of the electors in the exercise of the right vested in them by the Constitution to choose public officers on whatever principle or dictated by whatever motive they see fit, unless those [***7] motives contravene common morality and are, therefore, criminal, such as bribery, violence, intimidation or fraud, cannot be denied.

It has been suggested that committees can more readily makes fusions and combinations than conventions. If such is the case what power is there to forbid such fusions and combinations as the electors choose to make? It has also been suggested that a committee may be exposed to corrupt influences. I do not see why corruption might not be used to prevent the indorsement of another candidate as well as to indorse him. But assuming the suggestion well founded, it may be a reason for denying the power of nominating to a committee, but the power cannot be vested in them to be exercised in favor of one class of nominees and against another. Could a provision be upheld that the committee should not nominate [*63] a man worth more than a million dollars on the theory that he would be more able to corrupt it than a poor man? The fact is plain that the legislative provision is solely intended to prevent political combinations and fusions, and this is the very thing that I insist there is no right to prevent or hamper as long as our theory of government [***8] prevails, that the source of all power is the people, as represented by the electors.

A similar question arose in Michigan. A primary election law in that state provided that before the name of any candidate should be placed upon the ballot at the primary election such candidate should make oath that he was a candidate for the office. This provision was held unconstitutional. The court said: "The authority of the legislature to enact laws for the purpose of securing purity in elections does not include the right to impose any conditions which will destroy or seriously impede the enjoyment of the elective franchise. * * * We cannot escape the conclusion that the provision in question does most seriously impede the electors in the choice of candidates for office, and that it is in conflict with the provisions of section 1 of article 18 of the Constitution. * * * This provision * * * precludes the voters from choosing as a candidate one who declines to himself seek the office." (*Dapper v. Smith*, 138 Mich. 104.)

It is no answer to this position to say that the law permits conventions to nominate the candidates of other parties, and that, therefore, neither the right of the [***9] elector nor that of the candidate is impaired. Legislation to be valid must not only not deprive the elector of his right to vote for whom he will, but for what candidate he will, and it must not discriminate in favor of one set of candidates against another set. Would a statute which authorized a committee to nominate as its own candidate a candidate of either of the two great political parties, but not a candidate of one of the smaller parties, or authorized it to name a black-haired man, but not a redhaired man, be valid? Yet, if the argument by which it is sought to sustain the legislation before us is sound, it would equally support such legislation. It could be said that no [*64] right was impaired because conventions were at liberty to nominate red-haired men, though committees were not.

The orders of the Appellate Division and Special Term should be affirmed, with costs.

Gray, J. I think that the determination below was right and that the order appealed from should be affirmed. The courts have followed, as I understand, a decision made in 1902 by Mr. Justice Bischoff in *Matter of Gillespie v. McDonough*, \(39 Misc. Rep. 147\). There a precisely similar situation [***10] existed; the committee of the state convention of the Prohibition party nominating as their candidate for the office of attorney-general the candidate of the Democratic [**264] party for the same office. That decision has been acquiesced in for the past eight years. The legislature has, repeatedly, had under consideration amendments of the Election Law (Cons. Laws, ch. 17) and, in 1909, revised and consolidated that law; but the provisions of the section, (136), in question then and now, have not been changed. I am clear that when the committee of the Independence League party, duly authorized by resolution of its delegates, in convention assembled, "to make original nominations for justices of the Supreme Court," etc., placed in nomination the respondent, Garret J. Garretson, that was an original nomination by the party and that it was not invalidated, within the provisions of section 136 of the Election Law, because Garretson was a candidate for the same office on the ticket of the Republican party. Section 120 of the law is entitled "Party Nominations" and provides that "Party nominations of candidates for public office can only be made by a convention, or by a duly authorized [***11] committee of such convention, of a political party which at the last preceding general election, * * * at which a governor was elected, cast ten thousand votes," etc. The section contemplates that the "party nomination" may be made by the convention, or by its committee appointed for the purpose. The ordinary mind would, irresistibly, infer that the nomination by such committee would be as "original," as [*65] though made by delegates in convention. That such was, also, the legislative understanding seems to be apparent from the language in the next section. Section 121, in providing for "Party certificates of nomination," requires that "the party certificate * * * shall contain the title of the office for which each person is nominated, and * * * shall, also, designate * * * the name of the political, party which the convention, primary or committee making such nomination represents. * * * When the nomination is made by a committee, the certificate of nomination shall contain a copy of the resolution passed at the convention," etc. The whole intendment of this section is aimed at the certificate, whereby an original nomination of a candidate is made by a political [***12] party, whether made in convention, or by the committee there selected by the delegates for the purpose. When, later, the situation is considered, which may arise from vacancies occurring, we find section 135 enacted to meet it. It is entitled "Filling vacancies in nominations." It provides that "If a nomination is duly declined, or the attempt to nominate at a primary results in a tie, or a candidate regularly nominated dies before election day, or is found to be disqualified * * * or if any certificate of nomination is found to be defective, * * *, the committee appointed on the face of such certificate of nomination * * * may make a new nomination to fill the vacancy so created, or may supply such defect," etc. Then section 136 follows, whose language gives rise to the question before us, which is entitled "Certificates of new nominations." It provides how "the certificate so made" shall be executed and filed, and what shall be the duty of the secretary of state upon its filing. Then, immediately, follows in the section the provision that "When no nomination shall have been originally made by a political party or by an independent body for an office, or when a vacancy [***13] shall exist, it shall not be lawful for any committee of such party or independent body authorized to make nominations or to fill vacancies, to nominate or substitute the name of a candidate of another party or independent body for such office; it [*66] being the intention of this chapter that when a candidate of one party is nominated and placed on the ticket of another party or independent body, such nomination must be made at the time and in the manner provided for making original nominations by such party or independent body." I think that this section, when read in the light of the preceding sections, should be regarded as having reference to the "new nominations" to be made, where the vacancies have occurred, which the preceding section 135 has covered in its provisions. If we take the view, which I think proper and reasonable, of section 120, that nominations of party candidates made according to its provisions are original nominations, we have no difficulty in referring the language of section 136 to, and in harmonizing it with, the provisions for making new nominations, made necessary by the happening of the events specified in section 135. The inhibition of section [***14] 136 against the selection of a candidate on another ticket for the same office would not apply to a case where the committee was acting for the convention, in making nominations for offices upon their party's ticket. In that case the intendment of section 136, that such a nomination "must be made at the time and in the manner provided for making original nominations by such party," would be satisfied. The intent of the statute may be so inartificially expressed as to give rise to debate; but, when we consider the provisions in their order and in their apparent connection with the subjects of each, we should find no difficulty in interpreting their purport in the way I have indicated. The question has been fully discussed in the opinions rendered by Justice Bischoff, in Gillespie v. McDonough, (supra), and by Justice Stapleton in the present case, and I deem it unnecessary to speak further. I think that our affirmance should be rested upon the ground stated, as sufficient for the disposition of the appeal. As a majority of my associates, however, desire, also, to concur with the chief judge in the views expressed by him, I shall join with them in holding that the provisions [***15] of section 136 are unconstitutional and, therefore, invalid, in forbidding the [***265] committee [*67] of a political party, authorized to make nominations, to nominate as a candidate for an office on the party ticket a person who is the candidate of another party for the same office. The power of the legislature to regulate may not, validly, be stretched so far as to restrict a body, authorized to make nominations for a political party, in its right to select any duly qualified person as a candidate for public office. It cannot deprive the electors of the right to vote for any person for a public office not disqualified under our laws.

I think the affirmance may well be placed upon the first ground discussed; but if necessary to the affirmance, I shall concur with the chief judge's opinion.

Hiscock, J. I concur for affirmance on the first ground stated by Judge Gray. The provisions of the Election Law governing the question now before us are not entirely free from ambiguity and uncertainty. I think, however, that they may fairly be construed as permitting what was done in this case, and in view of the fact that the legislature for several years has [***16] allowed such interpretation by the courts to prevail and be followed by political parties when, independent of the question of constitutionality raised by Chief Judge Cullen, it could have avoided or prevented the same by a slight amendment of the statute makes me the more ready to adopt this view.

Haight, J. (dissenting). On the 6th day of October, 1910, at a convention of delegates of the Independence League party, held in and for the second judicial district, a resolution was adopted appointing a committee to make original nominations for three justices of the Supreme Court on the Independence League ticket for that district, and subsequently on the 7th day of October, at a meeting of that committee, it placed in nomination for the offices aforesaid Garret J. Garretson, Samuel T. Maddox and Harrington Putnam, who previously, and on the 1st day of October, 1910, had been placed in nomination by the Republican party at its judicial convention held in and for that judicial district. Upon filing the [*68] certificate of such nomination with the secretary of state by the committee of the Independence League, the appellant entered a protest with the secretary [***17] of state, in which he claimed that such nomination made by the committee was void and in violation of the provisions of section 136 of the Election Law. The protest having been overruled by the secretary of state, these proceedings were instituted by the appellant, who was the nominee for justice of the Supreme Court in that district by the Democratic party.

The question thus presented for determination is as to whether a candidate who has been nominated by a political party for an office can be nominated by a duly authorized committee of a convention of another political party under the Election Law of our state.

Section 120 of the Election Law provides that "Party nominations of candidates for public office can only be made by a convention, or by a duly authorized committee of such convention." It thus will be observed that the convention of a party is its supreme power, and is invested with primary and original power to make nominations of candidates for an office. No committee, primarily or originally, possesses such power. It is only after the convention has duly authorized a committee to make nominations that it is vested with power to do so. Its power is, therefore, delegated [***18] and secondary to that of the convention. Section 135 contains provisions with reference to filling vacancies occurring in party nominations by the declination, death or disqualification of a person nominated, and section 136 contains provisions with reference to the making of a certificate by the committee, the signing and filing of it, and then concludes as follows: "When no nomination shall have been originally made by a political party or by an independent body for an office, or when a vacancy shall exist, it shall not be lawful for any committee of such party or independent body authorized to make nominations or to fill vacancies, to nominate or substitute the name of a candidate of another party or independent body for such office; it being the intention of this chapter that when a candidate [*69] of one party is nominated and placed on the ticket of another party or independent body, such nomination must be made at the time and in the manner provided for making original nominations by such party or independent body."

Some confusion appears to exist with reference to the meaning of the word "originally," as appears in the first clause of the statute: "When no nomination [***19] shall have been originally made by a political party for an office," the contention being that "originally" refers to a nomination made either at a convention or by a committee appointed by the convention. But it appears to me that this question is answered by the statute itself, for in construing it we are bound to give force to all of its provisions, provided they can be harmonized with each other. True, the nomination by a committee is original in the sense that it is first made. But it must be remembered that the statute has invested the convention with the power to make nominations and that its power is primary and original. When the convention is called for the purpose of making nominations, its power so to do is original, and when it delegates that power to a committee, the committee's action is secondary and subject to the power of the convention. An examination of the provisions of sections 120, 121 and 135, and those under review of section 136, make it clear that the convention [**266] is empowered to appoint two committees, and only two, one to make nominations and the other to fill vacancies. If the convention itself nominates candidates for all the positions [***20] to be filled, then no committee to make nominations could be properly appointed, for there would be nothing for the committee to do; and the only committee that would be necessary in such a case would be a committee to fill vacancies. If the word "originally," therefore, refers to nominations made in the first instance by the convention, then all of the provisions which follow become of force and effect. If, however, the word "originally" means the nomination made by a committee, then no force or effect can be given to a portion of the statute which follows: "When no nomination shall have been originally made by a political party * * * [*70] for an office, or when a vacancy shall exist." Here we have distinct reference to the two committees which the convention has been authorized to appoint in the preceding sections of the statute, to wit, a committee to make nominations, and a committee to fill vacancies. The statute then proceeds: "It shall not be lawful for any committee of such party * * * to make nominations or to fill vacancies" (here again we have the two functions distinctly referred to, to make nominations and to fill vacancies), "to nominate or substitute the [***21] name of a candidate of another party or independent body for such office." And then the statute concludes: "It being the intention of this chapter that when a candidate of one party is nominated and placed on the ticket of another party or independent body, such nomination must be made at the time and in the manner provided for making original nominations by such party or independent body." The time and manner provided for making original nominations, under the statute, is the convention called for that purpose. If the committee to make nominations is to be exempted from the restrictions of the statute, then all of the provisions specifically relating to its functions become meaningless and senseless. If, however, the legislature referred to a nomination by the convention, then every provision becomes clear and operative.

The committee appointed to make nominations, as well as the committee appointed to fill vacancies possess separate, independent functions; but those functions may be delegated to one committee who is empowered to make nominations as well as to fill vacancies. In such case the limitations of the statute extend to each of the functions of the committee.

The provisions [***22] of the statute under review were inserted in the Election Law in 1896, chapter 909, section 66. Its purpose was to correct an evil that had made its appearance in the nomination of candidates for office. A number of parties had come into existence in which nominations for office were made and placed upon the official ballot. Some of these parties, meeting in convention, only made nominations for one [*71] or two positions, and then adjourned after appointing a committee to make nominations and to fill vacancies. In some instances rumors were circulated that positions upon such party ballot had been improperly disposed of to candidates upon other party ballots, so that it was not uncommon to find the name of a candidate on three or four columns of the official ballot. This evil the legislature attempted to correct. If the statute is now to be construed as having no reference to committees appointed to make nominations, then the evil sought to be remedied by the legislature chiefly fails. It is true that it is conceded that it applies to the committee authorized to fill vacancies, but it was not in the committee that filled vacancies that the evil practice referred to existed. [***23] It consequently would follow that the statute is practically meaningless and accomplished no beneficial results.

It is now contended that "originally" means a nomination not made before the time required by the statute for the filing of a certificate of nominations thirty days before election, and that the limitation upon the powers of the committee thereafter applies, whether it be a committee to make nominations or of filling vacancies. I had supposed that the power of a party to make nominations ended with the limitation of time in which the certificate is required to be filed, and that thereafter its power was limited to the filling of vacancies. In order to construe the statute in accordance with the suggestion, it would practically have to be rewritten and reference made to the thirty-day clause. It would require something more than the transposing of words and sentences or the substituting of words in order to make the meaning of the legislature clear.

It has been further suggested that the legislature had no power to limit a party in making nominations. Assume this to be so. The legislature in this case has not limited the power of the convention to make nominations [***24] of candidates of another party. The convention may do so, or it may appoint a committee to meet a committee of another political party and agree upon candidates who shall be supported by their respective [*72] parties. Nor has the legislature limited the power of a convention to dispense with an annual session and delegate its power to a committee to make nominations for the next succeeding year. But in such a case the committee so appointed becomes the sole and original power to make nominations for that year, and consequently the provisions of the statute do not apply to nominations "made at the time and in the manner provided for making original nominations by such party." All that the legislature has attempted to do in this case is to regulate the manner in [**267] which nominations shall be made and to specify the extent to which a convention may delegate its powers to a committee. This does not, to my mind, infringe upon any of the constitutional provisions.

In the Matter of the Application of John J. Hopper, Appellant, v. J. Gabriel Britt et al., Constituting the Board of Elections of the City of New York, Respondents

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the first judicial department, entered September 28, 1911, which reversed, as matter of law, an order of Special Term granting a motion for a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel the board of elections of the city of New York to print sample and official ballots for the ensuing general election in accordance with the provisions of section 331 of the Election Law as they stood prior to the passage of chapter 649 of the Laws of 1911.

Matter of Hopper v. Britt, 146 App. Div. 363, reversed.

Disposition: Ordered accordingly.

1. Not only is legislation contravening the express commands of the Constitution void, but legislation contravening what the Constitution necessarily implies is also void.
2. The power granted to the legislature to prescribe the method of [***2] conducting elections cannot be so exercised as to disfranchise constitutionally qualified electors, and any system that unnecessarily prevents the elector from voting or from voting for the candidate of his choice violates the Constitution.
3. The provision of section 12 of chapter 649 of the Laws of 1911, that the name of a person nominated by more than one political party shall be printed but once upon the ballot, and regulating in detail the method of carrying out such provision, is unconstitutional as unjustly discriminating between electors in the facility afforded them for casting their votes for the candidates of their choice.

The facts, so far as material, are stated in the opinion.

Counsel: Herbert R. Limburg and Clarence J. Shearn for appellant. The portions of chapter 946 of the Laws of 1911 which amend sections 331, 368 and 134 of the Election Law are clearly unconstitutional and void. (Matter of Halpin, 108 App. Div. 271; Matter of Callahan, 200 N. Y. 60; Matter of McCloskey, 21 Misc. Rep. 365; Matter of Bolger, 48 Misc. Rep. 584; Matter of Independent Nominations, 186 N. Y. 278; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 393; People ex rel. Devery [***3] v. Coler, 173 N. Y. 103; People ex rel. Goring v. President, etc., 144 N. Y. 616; Matter of Madden, 148 N. Y. 136; Fernbacher v. Roosevelt, 90 Hun, 441.)

A. S. Gilbert and Julius M. Mayer for appellant. The law under discussion violates the provisions of section 1 of article 1 and of article 2 of the Constitution of the state. (Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 393; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140; White v. White, 5 Barb. 474; People v. Toynbee, 20 Barb. 198; Burby v. Howland, 155 N. Y. 270; People ex rel. Bolton v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50; Matter of Callahan, 200 N. Y. 60.)

Albert S. Bard for Citizens' Union, intervening. The ballot provisions of the statute are unconstitutional because of the arbitrary discrimination between different political organizations with respect to the granting or withholding of a place on the ballot. Among other discriminations "political parties" are given a place on the ballot, but "independent bodies" are denied a place under precisely similar circumstances. (Matter of Callahan, 200 N. Y. 59; Murphy v. Curry, 137 Cal. 479.) The obvious purpose of the [***4] act is to put artificial and arbitrary barriers in the way of fusion of parties and independent voting. These are violations of equal rights of suffrage and render the act unconstitutional. The right to nominate is an empty right unless a political organization may compete with other organizations at the polls upon equal terms. (Matter of Callahan, 200 N. Y. 59.)

Archibald R. Watson, Corporation Counsel (Abram I. Elkus, Terence Farley and George P. Nicholson of counsel), for respondents. The act is a reasonable regulation, and is within the legislative discretion. (Matter of Madden, 148 N. Y. 136.) The only rights which the Constitution safeguards are the rights of electors. No such rights are violated by the act of 1911. (Matter of Madden, 148 N. Y. 136; Todd v. Election Comrs., 104 Mich. 474; State v. Bode, 55 Ohio St. 224.) The Constitution does not guarantee to a party a column on the ballot. (State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 100 Wis. 525.)

D-Cady Herrick, R. Burnham Moffat, John B. Stanchfield, Bartow S. Weeks, Ellwood M. Rabenold and Frank M. Patterson for Democratic State Committee, intervening.

[*146] [**371] This appeal presents a single issue, the constitutionality and validity of certain provisions of an act of the legislature of this year (Chap. 649, Laws 1911) entitled "An act to amend the election law generally." In this state for some years in the conduct of elections we have had the official ballot. Under the various statutes prescribing the form and character of that ballot, every political party that cast at the preceding election 10,000 votes for governor is entitled to a column on the ballot in which are placed the names of its nominees for the various offices to be filled by election. [**372] In the caption of the column is the name of the party and also any emblem that it may select to designate it. Further provision is made for independent nominations; that is to say, any body of electors may by certificate place in nomination for offices any persons they choose and select a party name and party emblem. Such independent [*147] nominations are given a column or part of a column as may be requisite, together with a caption giving the name and [***6] emblem adopted by the body, the same as in the case of nominations by political parties. For such independent nominations, if the nominees are candidates for state offices, six thousand or more voters are required to execute the certificate; if for municipal offices, two thousand in cities of the first class, one thousand in those of the second class, and five hundred in those of the third. Finally, there is a blank column containing no names of candidates, in which the elector may write the name of any person whom he chooses. Prior to the legislation under review a voter might by a cross mark in the circle at the head of any column vote for all of the nominees contained in such column, and if he chose to vote for some other person for any particular office he might make a similar mark opposite the name of that person, if such name was printed on the ballot; or, if not, write the name in the blank column. Physically disabled or illiterate voters, unable to read the ballot, are entitled to assistance in preparing their votes. A narration of further details is unnecessary for the disposition of this case.

It will be seen by this statement that the names of various candidates if [***7] placed in nomination by more than one political party or independent body would appear on the ballot in more than one place. By the statute of this year it has been enacted that "If any person shall have been nominated by more than one political party or independent body for the same office, his name shall be printed but once upon the ballot, and shall appear in the party column of the party nominating him which appears first upon said ballot, unless the said candidate shall by a certificate in writing duly signed and acknowledged by him request the custodian of primary records to print his name in the column of some other party or independent body which shall have nominated him, in which event [***148] his name shall be printed in such other column only. * * * When the same person has been nominated for the same office to be filled at the election, by more than one party or independent body, the title of such office shall be printed in the columns where his name is not printed, and underneath such title shall be printed in briefer capital type the words 'See column,' the blank space to contain the name of the party column in which his name is printed, excepting that if any independent [***8] body shall have nominated only the candidates of the other party or independent body, no separate column for the independent body in which the candidates' names do not appear shall be printed upon the ballot." (Section 12.) The relator contends that the statute is unconstitutional as unjustly discriminating between electors in the facilities afforded them for casting their respective votes, because where candidates are nominated by two or more organizations they can receive the "straight vote" of the electors of but one organization, while those affiliated with the other organizations which have placed them in nomination are compelled to seek other columns on the ballot referred to only by name, and there make the necessary additional marks, thus tending to confuse the electors and defeat their intention to vote for all the nominees of their organization. The Special Term of the Supreme Court held these provisions of the statute bad and granted a writ of mandamus to the election officers commanding the preparation and issue of the ballots in accordance with the old form. The Appellate Division has, by a divided court, reversed this order and denied the application as a matter of [***9] law and not in the exercise of discretion.

In the consideration of the question before us we are not unmindful of the principle that before a court should declare a statute of the legislature invalid it must be clearly shown that the statute is irreconcilable with the Constitution; nor do we fail to appreciate the hesitation [***149] with which courts should hold enactments of the legislature void. It may be true, as urged by the learned counsel for the respondents, that at the present day some courts are disposed to invade the constitutional prerogatives of a co-ordinate branch of the government by regarding what they believe to be the spirit of the Constitution, rather than its express mandates. But necessarily in all Constitutions or other instruments there are certain propositions which the instruments import, as well as those they expressly and in terms assert. Therefore, it is well settled that legislation contravening what the Constitution necessarily implies is void equally with the legislation contravening its express commands. A notable instance of this is the right to condemn private property. Our Constitution has never expressly forbidden taking private property [***10] for private use, but only prescribes that "Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." (Article 1, section 6.) Yet the courts early held that this necessarily excluded the right to take such property for private use, with or without compensation (Matter of Albany Street, 11 Wend. 149), a doctrine which has been steadily adhered to. (Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140; Matter of Ryers, 72 N. Y. 1.) The only provision of the Federal Constitution on the subject which affects the [***373] power of the states is that contained in the fourteenth amendment, that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law. It was said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Madisonville Traction Company v. Saint Bernard Mining Company (196 U.S. 239, 251): "There ought not to be any dispute, at this day, in reference to the principles which must control in all cases of the condemnation of private property for public purposes. It is fundamental in American jurisprudence that private property cannot be taken by the Government, National or state, except for purposes which are of a public character, although such taking [***11] [***150] be accompanied by compensation to the owner. That principle, this court has said, grows out of the essential nature of all free governments."

The qualifications of voters are prescribed by section 1 of article 2 of the Constitution and those qualifications are exclusive. By section 5 of the same article it is provided that "All elections by the citizens, except for such town officers as may be law be directed to be otherwise chosen, shall be by ballot, or by such other method as may be prescribed by law, provided that secrecy in voting be preserved." By section 1 of article 1 it is enacted that no member of this state shall be disfranchised unless by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers. It is, therefore, clear that the otherwise plenary power granted to the legislature to prescribe the method of conducting elections cannot be so exercised as to disfranchise constitutionally qualified electors, and any system of election that unnecessarily prevents the elector from voting or from voting for the candidate of his choice violates the Constitution. We have said "unnecessarily," for there is no practicable system of conducting elections at which some electors [***12] by sickness or other misfortune may not be able to vote. Under our law the blanket ballot affords a voter who may be unable to read the ballot from illiteracy or physical defect, an opportunity to vote by securing assistance, and to every elector the right to vote for whom he chooses by writing the name in the blank column if the name of his candidate is not on the ballot. If these rights were not accorded, the present Election Law would be unconstitutional. In *People ex rel. Goring v. President, etc., of Wappingers Falls* \(144 N. Y. 616\) a vacancy occurred in the office of the police justice of the village. At the next election the official ballot did not contain the name of that office or of any candidate to be voted therefor. The relator received votes at the election, the voters writing his name and the office on the ballot. It was contended that under the language of the Election [**151] Law, the votes were invalid. This court held the election good, saying: "The legislature may prescribe regulations for ascertaining the citizens who shall be entitled to exercise the right of suffrage, for that power is given to it by the Constitution. In prescribing regulations [***13] for that purpose, or in respect to voting by ballot, it does so subject to and, presumably, in furtherance of the constitutional right and its enactments are to be construed in the broadest spirit of securing to all citizens, possessing the necessary qualifications, the right freely to cast their ballots for offices to be filled by election and the right to have those ballots, when cast in compliance with the law, received and fairly counted. Legislation which fails in such respects and prevents the full exercise of the right as secured by the Constitution is invalid." (p. 229.) Indeed, there has been serious criticism on the constitutionality of the system because so many votes have been declared void by reason of the irregularity in the form of the marks made by the voters.

We think the constitutional provisions recited and the provision that certain officers shall be chosen by the electors necessarily further imply that every elector shall have the right to cast his vote with equal facility to that afforded to other voters, or, to speak more accurately, without unnecessary discrimination against him as to the manner of casting his vote. The learned counsel for the respondents [***14] have cited the decisions of the courts of several states upholding election laws with provisions similar to that under discussion. The clearest expression of the ground on which the decisions of those courts proceed is found in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Michigan in *Todd v. Election Commrs.* \(104 Mich. 474\): "The Constitution does not guarantee that each voter shall have the same facilities with every other voter in expressing his will at the ballot-box, or, to apply the rule to the present case, it does not guarantee to each voter the right to express his will by a single mark. * * * It [**152] follows then that every voter has a reasonable opportunity to vote for him (the candidate). This is the sole constitutional right guaranteed him."

Doubtless the Constitution of this State does not guarantee to each voter the right to express his will by a single mark or in any other particular manner, but with great deference to the learned court from which we have quoted, in our opinion the Constitution, by providing that certain officers shall be chosen by the electors, does guarantee that each voter shall have the same facilities as any other voter in expressing his [***15] will at the ballot-box, so far as practicable. Any other principle, in our judgment, would be destructive of fair elections. Some impediments to the exercise of the right to vote are, as already stated, under any practicable system of conducting elections unavoidable, and when these impediments [**374] are dependent on circumstances and conditions not connected with the status of the candidates, for whom the vote is to be cast, they rarely affect the result of an election -- the losses of one candidate being offset by those of the others. Not so with the impediments of the kind prescribed by this statute, which are directed solely at the status of the particular nominee for whom the vote is to be cast. The change from the old system does not diminish the size of the ballot, nor does it decrease the printing on it; it does not tend to make voting easier for the elector, or to avoid confusion on his part, but has the contrary effect. Surely the name of a candidate printed in the appropriate column is less confusing to the elector than a reference to some other column denoted only by its party name. While the Constitution does not guarantee that the elector shall be allowed [***16] to express his vote by a single mark, our position is that he is guaranteed the right to express his will by a single mark if other voters are given the right to express theirs by a single mark and there is no difficulty in according the right to all. It is said by the Supreme Court of Ohio in *State v. Bode* \(55 Ohio St. 224\), [**153] in upholding a law of this kind: "There is no discrimination against or in favor of any one; and if any inequality arises, it arises not from any inequality caused by the statute, but by reason of inequalities in the persons of the voters, and such inequalities are unavoidable. It is always much more difficult for some electors to cast their ballots than others. Distance, bad roads, means of transportation, bad health, and many other considerations, may and do render it much more difficult for some men to cast their ballots than others. But these difficulties inhere in the men themselves, and not in the law. * * * The inconvenience is only that experienced by every one who votes other than a straight ticket." This argument ignores the distinction between difficulties or inconveniences occurring by nature or accident and inconvenience created [***17] by statute. Inequality in the facilities afforded the electors in casting their votes may defeat the will of the people as thoroughly as restrictions which the courts would hold to operate as a disfranchisement of voters. In 1884 the control of the government of the whole country was transferred from one political party to another through the vote of this state by an average plurality of less than 1,150 votes. The vote for the electors of the successful party was over 560,000. Therefore, if an inconvenience in the method of casting his vote applicable to one candidate only had affected the vote of but one man in 470, the result would have been changed. If it were provided that voting on the blanket ballot should be done by either writing or pasting thereon under the names of the offices to be filled, the names of the candidates, it is not certain that this plan could be condemned as creating such obstacles to the exercise of the rights of the electors as to render the scheme unconstitutional; but if the plan went further and provided that the candidates of the party polling the highest vote at the last election should be printed in one column and the electors allowed [*154] [***18] to vote therefor by a cross-mark, while all the other candidates were required to be voted for by writing or pasting their names on the ballots, I think no one would hesitate to condemn the scheme as unconstitutional. Certainly under that plan there would be great difficulty in turning out the party in power. The condemnation of such a statute would proceed, at least primarily, not on the ground that it disfranchised the voters, but on account of the unequal opportunities to vote afforded the electors. That we are right in the position that equality of opportunity should be afforded electors is a fundamental principle of the constitutional law of this state, we need only refer to the first Constitution adopted by us. Previous to the Revolution elections in the colony were held viva voce. The Constitution of 1777 recited: "Whereas, an opinion has long prevailed among divers of the good people of this State, that voting at elections by ballot would tend more to preserve the liberty and equal freedom of the people than voting viva voce: to the end, therefore, that a fair experiment be made, which of these two methods of voting is to be preferred:" and it directed that [***19] after the termination of the war then existing between the colonies and Great Britain the legislature should enact that elections for senators and representatives should be by ballot, and should direct the manner in which the same should be conducted. We, therefore, hold the statutory provisions challenged to be unconstitutional because they unnecessarily and substantially discriminate between electors in the opportunities and facilities afforded for voting for the candidates of their choice. If the discrimination were trivial our decision would be different, but we know from the election litigations that have come before us that the discrimination here is of a very substantial character, and where voting machines are used the difficulty of voting a split ticket is still greater than where voting is by ballot.

At this point we may call attention to a later decision [*155] made by the Supreme Court of Michigan. In *Dapper v. Smith* \(138 Mich. 104\) the validity of a provision which required that before the name of any candidate should be placed on the ballot such candidate should on oath declare his purpose to become such, was challenged and held unconstitutional. It [***20] was said by the learned court: "The man who may be willing to consent to serve his State or his community in answer to the call of duty when chosen by his fellow-citizens to do so [**375] is excluded, and the electorate has no opportunity to cast their votes for him. It is not an answer to this reasoning to say that the electors may still vote for such a man by using 'pasters.' We cannot ignore the fact that parties have become an important and well-recognized factor in government. Certain it is that this law fully recognizes the potency of parties, and provides for party action as a step towards the choice of an officer at the election. The authority of the legislature to enact laws for the purpose of securing purity in elections does not include the right to impose any conditions which will destroy or seriously impede the enjoyment of the elective franchise." As already said, we think it doubtful whether a form of official ballot by which all voting should be done by pasters which are easily attached to the ballot, could be held such an obstacle as to destroy or defeat the enjoyment of the elective franchise. But the decision could very properly have proceeded on the ground [***21] that an unnecessary and substantial discrimination against any body of electors was unconstitutional.

It is urged that there are inequalities under the old form of ballot, but, at least, the most of those inequalities are unavoidable. The party that polled at the last election the greatest number of votes is given the first column on the ballot. As long as the face of the ballot is a plane surface, which has always been the case with us, and there is a party column, some party must have the first place. Every candidate is not given the right to [*156] have his name printed on the official ballot. Such a provision would render an official ballot impossible. But not only are all parties or bodies polling 10,000 votes, which is less than one per cent of the whole vote of the state, given the right to a separate column, but independent bodies, on the petition of but a small fraction of the electorate, have the same right. Thus, the rights of the electors of all organizations which have the most remote or shadowy chance of electing their nominees are given equal rights with those of the great parties, while the inviolable right of every elector is secured by the blank column. [***22] But if the character of the ballot necessarily involves discrimination against certain classes or bodies of electors, it is a reason that the statute should not increase the discrimination.

It has been urged in justification of the statutory provisions before us that independent bodies are often organized for the sake of trading or combining with the regular parties or other organizations on corrupt considerations. It is not pretended, however, that the statute tends to prevent that evil, save in one way, by making it more difficult to vote fusion or coalition tickets. The same argument was advanced in *Matter of Callahan* \(200 N. Y. 59\), where it was held that the legislature could not constitutionally prevent the nomination of fusion or combination candidates. We there said: "The liberty of the electors in the exercise of the right vested in them by the Constitution to choose public officers on whatever principle or dictated by whatever motive they see fit, unless those motives contravene common morality and are, therefore, criminal, such as bribery, violence, intimidation or fraud, cannot be denied." (p. 62.) The legislature might make combinations effected by bribery or [***23] illegal considerations criminal and punish the actors. On proof that an organization was effected and nominations made in pursuance of such criminal bargain the courts might be authorized to strike such nominations from the ballot. [*157] But because many coalitions between various bodies of electors are corrupt and criminal it cannot forbid coalition nominations or indirectly effect the same thing by rendering it more difficult to vote for a coalition nominee. One great object of the present ballot was to prevent bribery by rendering it difficult to determine how any elector voted. There is, however, an opportunity for identification left. The elector may, in the blank column, write the name of some particular candidate and thus identify his vote. Undoubtedly the voter may be punished for so doing on proof of the unlawful purpose for which he wrote the name of the particular person. Fortunately the evil does not seem at all common. But even if it were prevalent, to correct the evil the inviolable right of the elector to vote for whom he chose could not be invaded.

The method of voting on an official ballot which has prevailed with us now for a number of years probably [***24] has corrected evils that formerly were prevalent. But, personally, I fear that, in some respects, it has undermined public morality on the question of the right of the elector to vote for whom he will, provided it is dictated by no criminal consideration. Ever since the adoption of the present scheme there has been an attempt to provide a ballot in such form as to prevent the elector from voting in the way he wishes to vote. In this constant effort it must be conceded that persons desirous of so-called ballot reform, and not political partisans, have been the most active, though by the present legislation the latter seem to have been more successful. All labors by a citizen to induce his fellow-citizens to change the principle on which they cast their votes, when he believes that principle is injurious to the welfare of the community, are praiseworthy and patriotic. But however gross may be the error of his fellows he has no moral right to correct that error by making it difficult for them to exercise their constitutional rights.

[*158] The order of the Appellate Division should be reversed and that of the Special Term in substance affirmed, without costs. There are some [***25] errors, however, in the form of the [**376] Special Term order, for which reason it must be modified, and the order may be settled on two days' notice before the judge writing the opinion.

In the Matter of William F. Devane, Respondent, v. Carl E. Touhey, Appellant, and Thomas F. Donohue et al., Constituting the Board of Elections of Albany County, et al., Respondents. (And Other Proceedings.)

Prior History: [****1] Appeals, on constitutional grounds, from judgments of the Supreme Court, entered, variously, on September 19 and 26, 1973 in Albany County upon decisions of the court at a Trial Term (Harold E. Koreman, J.), invalidating independent nominating petitions purporting to nominate appellant Carl E. Touhey as the candidate of the Clean Government Party, an independent group, for the public office of Mayor of the City of Albany in the general election to be held November 6, 1973, and appellants Betty Gross, A. Lynne Graburn and James P. Faughnan, Jr. as candidates of independent groups for the public offices of, respectively, Alderwoman, 15th Ward, City of Albany; County Legislator, 7th Legislative District, County of Albany, and County Legislator, 15th Legislative District, County of Albany.

Opinion

[*50] [**229] [***362] On this direct appeal, appellants in each of these cases [****6] attack the constitutionality of section 138-b of the Election Law which provides that no candidate for an office, other than a judicial or State-wide office, shall be eligible to receive the [*51] nomination and to appear on the ballot as the candidate of both a party<sup>1</sup> and an independent body.<sup>2</sup>

[**230] After receiving the nomination of the Republican Party for separate public offices,<sup>3</sup> each of the appellants was nominated by independent groups for the same office. Proceedings were instituted to invalidate and declare null and void the independent [****7] petitions filed with the Albany County Board of Elections upon the ground that section 138-b bars the independent nominations.

Supreme Court, Albany County, agreed and declared each of the independent petitions null and void.

We conclude that section 138-b is unconstitutional and, therefore, the orders appealed from should be reversed.

There can be no doubt about the authority of the Legislature to enact reasonable laws and regulations for the conduct of primary and general elections. Such laws, of course, may control the manner of preparation of the ballot, so long as they do not prevent a qualified elector from exercising his constitutional right to vote for a candidate [****8] and party of his choice. On the other hand, it is equally also well [***363] "settled law from the earliest period in the history of our state that [the Legislature] cannot enact arbitrary exclusions from office." ( *Matter of Callahan*, 200 N. Y. 59, 61.)

The section in question provides, in part, that "[any] candidate who has received and accepted the nomination of a party, for an office other than judicial or statewide shall not be eligible to receive the nomination of any independent

Carl E. Touhey -- Mayor of the City of Albany.

A. Lynne Graburn -- Member of Albany County Legislature -- 7th District.

James P. Faughnan, Jr. -- Member of Albany County Legislature -- 15th District.

group for the same [*52] office for the same year." This section was added to the Election Law as an outgrowth of section 248 of the Election Law, which was amended by the same act. (L. 1971, ch. 1179.)

Prior to the amendment of section 248 and the enactment of section 138-b, a candidate receiving the cross nominations of a party and an independent group would have his name appear in two separate columns or rows on the ballot, indicating his nomination by the party as well as the independent group. Where, however, a candidate received the nomination of two or more parties, his name would not be placed on the ballot in a separate row or column as the independent nominee, but, instead, [****9] the symbol or emblem of the independent group would be included with his name in the row or column of one of the parties where his name already appeared.

Now, under section 138-b, a candidate receiving the nomination of a party for an office other than judicial or State-wide, "shall not be eligible to receive the nomination of any independent group for the same office for the same year."

The appellants, as Republican Party candidates for public office, are deemed ineligible to receive and accept the nomination of an independent group, thereby preventing them from having their names listed on the ballot as nominees of an independent group. The statute, however, does not bar their opponents in the general election, nominees of both the Democratic and Conservative Parties, from having their names appear in two separate rows or columns for the same office. Surely, there can be no lawful or rational justification for a statute that allows one candidate to accept the nominations from two different political groups, while at the same time denying another candidate for the same office the same opportunity.

[**231] As we so prophetically stated in Callahan (208 N. Y., at p. 61) [****10] in invalidating a similar legislative enactment, "What exclusion could be more arbitrary than that one party or organization should not be permitted to nominate the candidate of another."

There can be little doubt that the statute, as it now reads, grants an obvious advantage to a candidate who receives and accepts the nomination of more than one party, as his name will appear on the ballot under the emblem of each party nominating him while another [***364] candidate, who accepts the nomination of only one party or independent organization, is prevented from [*53] accepting the nomination of more than one party or organization. The grant of such an advantage to certain candidates, while denying the same privilege to others, represents a denial of the equal protection of our laws.

Although the respondents urge that the statute was designed to prevent the major parties from pre-empting the ballot to the exclusion of valid independent groups, no support for this conclusion is offered. As a matter of fact, the contrary could be inferred, considering the statute was introduced as a bipartisan measure without any explanation or comment.

Accordingly, we reverse the judgments [****11] of the Supreme Court and declare section 138-b of the Election Law unconstitutional as being violative of both the Federal and State Constitutions (U. S. Const., 14th Amdt.; N. Y. Const., art. I, § 11).

In each case: Judgment reversed, without costs, and judgment granted in favor of appellant.

[*1004] [**436] The proceeding is in the nature of mandamus. The petitioner asserts that the Wilson-Pakula Law (L. 1947, ch. 432) is unconstitutional and seeks to compel the respondent, the Secretary of State, to discharge his official duties, as though it had not been enacted. The allegations of fact in the petition are accepted as true as no answer has been interposed and the respondent moves to dismiss the petition.

While the petition states that the petitioner is not an enrolled member of the Democratic Party, the petition has been amended to allege specifically that he is an enrolled member of the American Labor Party in the 23d Senatorial district of the State of New York; that he is a duly qualified elector therein and is eligible to be a candidate for the office of State Senator which is to be filled at the general election on November 4, 1947, a vacancy existing in that office due to the resignation of the former incumbent. Petitioner asserts that he intends to circulate a designating petition among the enrolled members of the Democratic Party enabling him to have his name placed upon the primary ballot for the primary election to be held on July [***5] 29, 1947. Circulation of such designating petitions commences on May 13, 1947, and they must be filed by June 24, 1947. Petitioner claims that under the Wilson-Pakula Act his designating petition will not be valid and he cannot therefore be a nominee of the Democratic Party unless the Democratic Party Committee [**437] for the 23d Senatorial District votes to authorize him to be a designee and nominee, a situation which he does not envision and which, for the purposes of disposing of this matter we shall assume will not come to pass.

The law in question was signed by the Governor on March 25, 1947, and added to the Election Law a new section 136-a. It is sufficient for present purposes to state that it provides that no petition, designating any person as a candidate for party nomination [*1005] at a primary election, shall be valid unless the person so designated shall be enrolled as a member of the party referred to in said designating petition, at the time of the filing thereof. The same law thereafter provides that by appropriate action of the appropriate party committee, the designation and nomination of a person as a candidate for any office who is not enrolled as a [***6] member of a particular party may be authorized. Petitioner claims that this law violates section 1 of article I and section 1 of article II of the State Constitution.

Section 1 of article I reads as follows: "No member of this state shall be disfranchised, or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to any citizen thereof, unless by the law of the land, or the judgment of his peers."

Section 1 of article II reads as follows: "Every citizen of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a citizen for ninety days, and an inhabitant of this state for one year next preceding an election, and for the last four months a resident of the county, city, or village and for the last thirty days a resident of the election district in which he or she may offer his or her vote, shall be entitled to vote at such election in the election district of which he or she shall at the time be a resident, and not elsewhere, for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elective by the people, and upon all questions which may be submitted to the vote of the people * * *."

Political bodies are voluntary organizations of people who believe generally in the principles enunciated and the [***7] candidates offered to the people by the particular party of their choice. It is true that over the years the Legislature has enacted many laws regulating the conduct of political parties in order to correct abuses which had arisen. The voluntary nature of political parties nevertheless continues to be recognized. No qualified voter is required to enroll in any particular political party. He has the freedom of choice of enrolling in a particular party or refraining from enrolling.

Petitioner argues strenuously that the law in question is an invasion of the rights of suffrage of a duly qualified voter; that the invasion of the rights of suffrage of a duly qualified voter would be a violation of the Constitution and that since nominations are an important process in the matter of the ultimate election of candidates, a limitation on the rights [**438] of the voter in nominating candidates also contravenes the constitutional provisions referred to.

[*1006] An unenrolled voter cannot participate in a primary election. Therefore it might be argued that the rights of a person who will be qualified to vote at the general [***8] election has been invaded by his statutory preclusion from participating in a party primary election. This preclusion is not an invasion of the rights of such a voter. It is a situation which under his right of free choice he elected to occupy. So, too, a person who is enrolled as a Democrat cannot vote in the Republican Party primary election or in the American Labor Party primary election and vice versa. But petitioner argues that the law in question does restrict the rights of suffrage of an enrolled member of a political party because it precludes him from signing a designating petition for a person of his choice who is not a member of his political party or perhaps, to put it more accurately, if he does sign such petition, such act is a nullity. Disregarding for the moment the ultimate end sought to be effectuated by the Legislature in the enactment of this law, to wit, the prevention of raids upon any political party by or on behalf of persons who have elected not to be members of such political party, the fact still remains that the enrolled voter of any political party who desires to have as his nominee a person who is not an enrolled member thereof can do so by the simple [***9] expedient which is still reserved by the Election Law of writing in such person's name upon the primary ballot at the primary election. Thus, if there is a real demand by the members of any political party for the nomination of an individual who is not an enrolled member of that party, the majority of the enrolled voters of such party may nominate such person at the primary election even if the name of such person does not appear upon the printed ballot, due to the provisions of the law now in question. It is no answer to say that the enrolled voters of a political party will not, in sufficient numbers, write in the name of such a candidate. If there is merit in the contention that the Legislature cannot deprive a qualified voter of his right of suffrage at the general election and that accordingly the Legislature cannot do so with reference to a qualified enrolled voter with respect to his right of suffrage in the matter of making a nomination at the primary election, it would seem that there is a complete answer in the fact that under the law as it now exists, the ultimate right of voting for any person of his choice whether a member of his political party, or not, is reserved to every [***10] qualified voter who, at the general election, can write in the name of his choice; and, in like manner, every qualified enrolled voter of each party, on primary day, can vote for the candidates whose names are printed on the [*1007] ballot and in the case of more than one name being printed on the ballot then for the one of his choice or, if he is not content with the names printed on the ballot, he can write in the name [**439] of the person of his choice. Whether the required number of the qualified enrolled voters of a party are sufficiently interested to do so or not, is not, in my judgment, a test of the constitutionality of the statute involved. The test is that there is preserved unimpaired for every qualified enrolled voter of any political party the right at the primary election to vote for any person of his choice for a party nomination regardless of whether such person is an enrolled member of his party or not.

The same theory is carried through in our laws for people who are not enrolled in any political party and for whom appropriate machinery has been set up to make independent nominations, and finally, after all of the nominations have been duly made, whether [***11] party nominations or independent nominations, at the general election every qualified voter may vote for any one of the candidates printed on the ballot as the candidates of the regular political parties and of each independent body; or at such general election, each voter may vote for the candidate of his choice and is under no restraint, so far as the law is concerned, against voting for the candidate of a party of which he is not a member, and finally, if the qualified voter is not satisfied with any of the candidates printed on the ballot of any of the regular political parties or of any of the independent bodies, there is vested in him the right to write in the name of the candidate of his choice. This right exists unimpaired at the primary election and at the general election. It is true that the law in question establishes a difference in the machinery and mechanics between a nomination by a political party of a person who is an enrolled member of that party and of a person who is not. It does not preclude the nomination by a political party of a person who is not a member of that party nor is the majority of the enrolled voters of a political party foreclosed from nominating [***12] for office a person who is not a member of that party. It merely provides for a different method of accomplishing such a nomination. In the case of an enrolled member of a party, if the requisite number of signatures are obtained on the designating petition, such person may have his name printed upon the primary ballot of his party. In the case of a person who is not a member of the political party, then each enrolled member of such political party is free to refrain from signing a designating petition for a member of his own party or to sign a designating petition and yet at the primary election to write [*1008] in the name of the person of his choice, even if such a person be not a member of the political party of such voter. Thereby is retained unimpaired the absolute right of every enrolled member of every political party to vote for the nominee of his choice, whether such nominee be a member of his party or not. If the Legislature in its wisdom saw fit to remedy what it regarded as an evil of raids on a political party or intrusion into its affairs by persons who are not members thereof, such act cannot be said to be an unreasonable or unlawful exercise of its power and authority, [***13] so long as such action does not contravene the mandate of the Constitution.

Before a court should declare a statute of the Legislature void it must be clearly shown that the statute is irreconcilable with the Constitution.

The statute in question does not restrain freedom in nominating candidates at the primary.

Here, the Legislature has not enacted a law preventing the nomination of fusion or combination candidates. It has merely given to each political party greater protection against raids and unwarranted intrusion into its affairs by nonmembers thereof.

While petitioner's quarrel is essentially with subdivision 1 of the new law, dealing with designating petitions, he does contend that the entire statute is unconstitutional.

As to subdivision 1, the enrolled members of a party can nominate a nonmember of their party, whether the appropriate party committee desires such a result or not.

As to subdivisions 2 and 3 of the Wilson-Pakula Law, there is still left the right, with the approval of the appropriate party committee, to confer a nomination by such party on a nonmember thereof.

The prohibition [***14] against the nomination of a nonmember of a political party, by such party, is not absolute, as it was in *Matter of Callahan* \(200 N.Y. 59\).

In that case, there was an absolute prohibition against a political party naming as its candidate the candidate of another political party, unless such candidate was nominated at the time and in the manner provided for making original nominations.

There a political party could not nominate the candidate of another political party in any circumstances, if he had not been originally nominated by it.

[*1009] Here, the power is still reserved to name such a candidate, if the appropriate party committee authorizes such nomination.

The law in question does not, in my judgment, violate the provisions of either section 1 of article I or section 1 of article II of the Constitution and accordingly the motion of the respondent to dismiss the petition is granted.

Submit order.

Comments: Hello, Here is my statement regarding Eric Adams' actions against Rank Choice Voting.

Hello,

As a New Yorker who supports true democracy and fair elections, I urge you to REJECT ERIC ADAMS' PROPOSAL to switch New York City to a "jungle primary." This change, which the mayor is clearly trying to force through without public consent, will diminish the voices of Black and Brown New Yorkers, depress youth turnout in our elections, and is a transparent power-grab by our embattled Mayor. New York City cannot afford to upend its election system simply because Eric Adams is desperate. Please respect the will of the people and leave our primaries as they are.

Thank you,
Dana Stevens

Comments: See attached, but in brief: 1. Nonpartisan primary with top 2 by ranked choice voting going to the general election. Keeping RCV means voters get to vote their hearts in their first ranking and also means political minority party members (Ds in R districts, Rs in D districts) won't have to strategically vote for someone with a greater chance of making it to the general. It will also prevent situation where majority party runs so many people that vote is diluted and two members of minority district party get to runoff. 2. Move elections to midterm years (where Governor on ballot) for improved turnout and election focused on New York issues. 3. Support land use changes but include local Councilmembers in decision regarding community board appointments. Needed balance as you centralize more authority in hands of Borough President and City officers.

July 15th, 2025

Dear NYC Charter Commission Chair Burey and Members,

I am writing first to thank you for all your work to help address some of the greatest problems the City faces, from housing to our democratic deficit in making sure there are as few barriers as possible to participating in City elections.

On the elections question, I support a nonpartisan primary in even years that will allow the full spectrum of New Yorkers, whether they are registered with a party or not to participate. However, I encourage you to keep ranked choice in the primary so that the top 2 selected by ranked choice then move on to a one on one general election. I believe this better than the so called jungle primary because it allows voters to vote for candidates they believe to best without making a strategic voting choice out of fear their actual preferred candidate won't end up in the top 2. This will reduce the chances (mentioned by many of the candidates) that minority parties and their voters will be cut out of political discourse (for example, Republican voters may feel they must vote for a Democratic candidate in a largely Democratic district or the inverse in heavily Republican districts. If you have ranked choice, such a person can rank the Republican first and rank other candidates closer to their political philosophy second and third with the knowledge that vote will end up helping someone that may be a second or third choice go to the run-off election). It will also stop strange results like so many Democrats in a Democratic majority district (or the inverse for Republicans) such that the vote is split up so much that two Republicans end up advancing to the general. This has happened in a few local state races in California (effecting both parties basically equivalently), its not particularly likely, but it is something that could be avoided if voters can rank candidates with the understanding that the top 2 vote getters by ranked choice will advance to the general. This may also help with concerns that fusion voting would be harmed by these changes. For the General Election ballot for example between the top two vote getters, fusion parties could be given the right to "nominate" one of the two top getters on one of their lines or for example, a rule could be instituted to allow one of the top two vote getters to list more than one party affiliation if the second listed party approves.

I also believe it is important to implement this new system concurrently with moving the election to even years to ensure maximum voter turnout and assuage some concerns that this change is about suppressing progressive political voices (by making party designations less valuable), especially in the aftermath of Assemblymember Mamdani's victory in the mayoral election. It was once common wisdom that elections in odd years discriminate against working-class, people of color, and young voters that may be more left-leaning. While I am not sure this any longer the case (witness the disproportionate turnout of Democratic voters in special elections across the country and the turnout this year in our Mayoral election primary), it is true that moving to even-years in places like Los Angeles that have had a nonpartisan primary and runoff system have allowed more progressive, younger, and minority to win and simply put allowed challengers to much more regularly unseat incumbents, creating real political competition in the City. Making these changes together then may assuage any concerns that exist that these changes are intended to favor candidates from any ideological lane. Most importantly, making these changes together creates the opportunity for maximum voter participation, allowing all voters regardless of party registration participation in selecting city officers and Councilmembers and making sure the elections are in higher turnout years that will mean less barriers to participation. I encourage you to move Mayoral elections to the midterm election years that coincide with the Governor's race to encourage more dialogue between candidates for Mayor and Governor and create an election cycle that is focused on New York issues.

In regards to the land use changes, I am writing to express general support for the planning and land use measures you suggest, with a slight modification. I encourage you to make sure that projects that include substantial commercial or any hotel uses are excluded from any streamlining measures, while I understand this is not your intent, it is very important to make sure that housing remains the focus here. Perhaps you could have a definition of mixed use that would only allow neighborhood serving retail as part of a project that would be streamlined from the measures so considered. Additionally, I think as you centralize some functions in the hands of the Borough President, it is only fair to increase some of the power of the local Councilmembers when it comes to appointing Community Board members. Such a measure could help strike the right balance when it comes to a critical source of local input, while also making sure that more of a Citywide approach is considered when it comes to housing.

Thank you very much,

Charlie Carnow

Testimony of Council Member Shahana Hanif to the 2025 Charter Revision Commission
July 15, 2025

I'm Council Member Shahana Hanif and I have the privilege of representing Brooklyn's 39th District. Thank you to the 2025 Charter Revision Commission for providing the opportunity for public testimony.

Increasing voter turnout in our local elections is an urgent and necessary goal—one that this Commission is well-positioned to advance. I strongly support Proposal 5, which would align municipal elections with federal election years. This change has already proven effective in other localities, significantly boosting voter participation, and I believe it would do the same here in New York City.

In contrast, Proposal 6—which would end party primary elections in favor of a so-called “jungle primary” model—raises serious concerns. A change of this magnitude necessitates a far more robust community engagement process than we've seen so far, as well as broader consensus across diverse stakeholders. At this time, I do not believe either threshold has been met.

That said, I don't reflexively oppose exploring alternatives to our current primary system. Reforms like ranked choice voting have already shown promise in helping voters more fully express their preferences.

However, the merits of other reforms—including open partisan primary models such as those used in Massachusetts and Virginia—have not received sufficient evaluation. The implications for campaign financing, voter behavior, and representation require careful study and public discussion.

Finally, it's important to acknowledge that Proposal 6 is emerging in the immediate aftermath of a highly contentious election cycle. This timing risks undermining public trust in the process and adds to the proposal's polarizing nature.

For these reasons, I urge the Commission to advance Proposal 5 to the ballot and reject Proposal 6 for now.

Turning to Proposal 1, I'm encouraged by its goal to fast-track affordable housing in every community. However, we must also address the significant pre-ULURP delays: land use applications often sit for years at the Department of City Planning (DCP) and in environmental review before reaching certification. The real bottleneck is not ULURP itself; many projects approved through ULURP more than two years ago are still awaiting financing from Housing Preservation & Development (HPD).

There's also widespread confusion about the land use process. Charter reforms should prioritize community education and engagement—both from the City and developers—to combat misinformation and increase transparency.

While Council Members vary in how they negotiate land use projects, many of us play a critical role in balancing competing interests. From my own experience, including the successful Arrow Linen Rezoning in Windsor Terrace, I've seen how a thoughtful process can deliver more affordable housing. But I've also seen how a narrow set of voices—often not representative of those most in need—can dominate public discourse. To truly meet our housing needs, the land use process must amplify input from residents without secure or stable housing, who are too often excluded.

Thank you for your consideration.

Comments: Testimony from Mae Lee, Executive Director, Chinese Progressive Association, regarding open primaries

TESTIMONY SUBMITTED TO THE NEW YORK CITY CHARTER REVISION COMMISSION
MAE LEE, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, CHINESE PROGRESSIVE ASSOCIATION
JULY 15, 2025

My name is Mae Lee, Executive Director of the Chinese Progressive Association (CPA) which is located in Manhattan’s Chinatown/Lower East side.

We are expressing our opposition to the consideration of a “jungle primary” system for NYC municipal elections where all candidates regardless of political party affiliation appear on one ballot with the top two or top four vote getters advancing to a general election in November.

CPA serves those who live, work, or go to school in this area. They are low income. We provide services to new immigrants, classes and assistance to help them become U.S. citizens, and register them to vote after they become American citizens. Since the 1990’s we have conducted non partisan voter registration, outreach, and education to increase the number of people to vote and become civically engaged in our community.

Most of our community are new citizens. Many voters in our community are not enrolled in a political party. Often their decision not to enrollment was made without significant knowledge its significance. Sometimes it is due to their experience in their home country.

However, political parties are important vehicles for building representation, coalitions, candidates and strategies that strategies to empower more communities. Political party primaries the top vote getters from the party (chosen by the voters of that party) to advance to the general election. Voters end up having more choices and more opportunities to vote.

Regarding voter turnout, in our community, the most common reason why a voter does not go to the polls is “the candidates all seem alike, my vote will not make a difference, it does not matter who is in office”

However, voters will become more engaged when 1) careful, meaningful voter education efforts about the issues occur and at the same time 2) candidates come to our communities, engage with us and demonstrate to us why we should support them. This is a multi-year on-going effort.

Simply having all candidates run in a single election in June and then advancing the top 2 or 4 vote getters to November doesn’t allow our community to take advantage of the opportunities to become more engaged, organized, and empowered through local organizing. Long term investments need to be made in these areas. We urge the NYC Charter Revision Commission to not consider jungle primaries for NYC elections.

Comments: Dear Members of the Commission, I write to express my utmost support for ballot proposals 1 through 4 being considered by the New York City Charter Revision Commission. The housing situation in New York City is dire, and we must do the most we can to prevent the continued harm of unaffordability and ever increasing rent burden to our city and its residents. As a resident of Brooklyn, I have become acquainted with the dire housing situation in our city on a personal level. Conversations with family, friends, and acquaintances inevitably return to anxieties about our ability to stay in the city long term or to start families in the city we grew up in or now call home. Every year, more people dear to me move away from New York City because of rising housing costs or are forced to move to more distant, cheaper neighborhoods in the city far away from their family and friends. We who remain must pay ever higher rents and constantly worry about our ability to ever rent our own place without a roommate or to afford having kids in the city we love. We struggle to get repairs done by our landlords who understand that we do not have anywhere else to go in a market with such a low rental housing supply. We constantly settle for bad housing conditions and overly expensive apartments, knowing that this is likely the best and cheapest we will have again. As a project manager in the city's Housing Preservation and Development agency, I also know firsthand that our current capabilities and tools are largely powerless to resolve the housing crisis without zoning and land use review process reform. I can proudly testify that our agency creatively and diligently leverages all available sources of federal, state, and city capital and subsidy to partner with private developers to preserve housing and bring new affordable units to the market to serve the neediest New Yorkers. Unfortunately, our efforts are limited and less effective than they could be. The city's efforts in new construction are hampered and made more costly by the uncertainties of ULURP, zoning review, and City Council review subject to member deference. As a result the projects we support require more capital subsidy per unit, and less housing gets built. Even more projects never get proposed. Our preservation and subsidy programs, in turn, are stressed by the unceasing rise in rents as supply fails to keep up with population growth in the city. Our resources stretch thinner, and we can preserve less units and provide rental subsidies to fewer households than we could with more abundant and cheaper housing. Most importantly, our efforts are only intended to serve the poorest of our city. Without a significant increase in rental supply that is outside the scope of our mandate, the vast majority of the renter middle class is left to face ever increasing housing costs with no reprieve. As such, I strongly support letting the public vote in support of the ballot measures 1 through 4 proposed by the Commission, especially because the measures acknowledge that meaningful progress in our housing crisis of chronic undersupply will only come from a level of development that the city simply cannot afford to finance through public funds only. We need to make it easier for profit-driven developers to build housing as well if we ever want to build enough housing to meaningfully lower rent prices. I commend the Commission for its proposal to create a new zoning action for publicly financed affordable housing at the Board of Standards and Appeals and to create a fast track review process for affordable housing projects in the community districts that build the least housing. These proposals would unlock new construction leading to more units and reduce the cost of construction per project, allowing the city to finance more housing through HPD. Nevertheless, I strongly believe that the main impact of this Charter revision will be through allowing ELURP and creation of a new Appeals Board that will bypass veto power from the city council and allow for modest zoning changes across the private market in the city. It is these measures that might be the most controversial but are also the most crucial for the Commission to bring for approval to the public. The housing crisis will be solved in this city when market rate housing can be built in response to market signals and developers have the opportunity to bring as many units to market as possible, and not just through making it easier to build city subsidized affordable housing (which can only serve the poorest slice of our city). Communities have legitimate concerns about development impacts including concerns surrounding infrastructure strain and neighborhood character changes. The current system, however, often blocks beneficial projects entirely rather than ensuring they meet community needs and are integrated into existing infrastructure. Our response to these legitimate concerns cannot continue to be a status quo in which many thousands of families are displaced annually through unaffordability. The proposed measures provide a sensible balancing of these concerns with the harm of inaction and make it easier to move forward projects that can help address our housing crisis while preserving pathways for meaningful community input rather than outright veto power. Two futures lie before us. In one, poorer future we fail to take bold action and compromise with pared-back measures or no measures at all. Our efforts do not yield much fruit, rents stay high, and backlash and despair set in. Our city grows ever more inaccessible to all but the increasingly wealthy, and poorer New Yorkers are forced to leave the place they call home to move somewhere they can more easily afford. In another better future, we act decisively and turn the tide on housing price increases while ensuring that development serves existing communities. Our market is gradually flooded with increasingly more affordable units, and New Yorkers breathe a sigh of relief as they realize that they can expect to stay in the city and neighborhoods they love. Landlords lose some of their monopoly and are incentivized to make repairs and end predatory rental practices in a crowded market. Artists, risk takers, families, and the poor and disabled get a chance at living in a city that values them and fights for their right to belong to it. More people get the opportunity to move here and contribute to our tapestry of life together. It is the second future in which I believe and which I urge you to make possible by letting the people of New York vote on these measures come November. I urge you to act firmly and maintain the strong measures you have suggested; preserve the measures that would allow for market rate housing development and do not scale back the bold proposals that this moment calls for by focusing on affordable housing only. We are given a unique opportunity, and we must not settle for less in this moment of crisis. Sincerely, Aviel Fradkine Brooklyn, 11216

To: NYC Charter Revision Commission

Dear Members of the Commission,

I write to express my utmost support for ballot proposals 1 through 4 being considered by the New York City Charter Revision Commission. The housing situation in New York City is dire, and we must do the most we can to prevent the continued harm of unaffordability and ever increasing rent burden to our city and its residents.

As a resident of Brooklyn, I have become acquainted with the dire housing situation in our city on a personal level. Conversations with family, friends, and acquaintances inevitably return to anxieties about our ability to stay in the city long term or to start families in the city we grew up in or now call home. Every year, more people dear to me move away from New York City because of rising housing costs or are forced to move to more distant, cheaper neighborhoods in the city far away from their family and friends. We who remain must pay ever higher rents and constantly worry about our ability to ever rent our own place without a roommate or to afford having kids in the city we love. We struggle to get repairs done by our landlords who understand that we do not have anywhere else to go in a market with such a low rental housing supply. We constantly settle for bad housing conditions and overly expensive apartments, knowing that this is likely the best and cheapest we will have again.

As a project manager in the city's Housing Preservation and Development agency, I also know firsthand that our current capabilities and tools are largely powerless to resolve the housing crisis without zoning and land use review process reform. I can proudly testify that our agency creatively and diligently leverages all available sources of federal, state, and city capital and subsidy to partner with private developers to preserve housing and bring new affordable units to the market to serve the neediest New Yorkers. Unfortunately, our efforts are limited and less effective than they could be. The city's efforts in new construction are hampered and made more costly by the uncertainties of ULURP, zoning review, and City Council review subject to member deference. As a result the projects we support require more capital subsidy per unit, and less housing gets built. Even more projects never get proposed. Our preservation and subsidy programs, in turn, are stressed by the unceasing rise in rents as supply fails to keep up with population growth in the city. Our resources stretch thinner, and we can preserve less units and provide rental subsidies to fewer households than we could with more abundant and cheaper housing. Most importantly, our efforts are only intended to serve the poorest of our city. Without a significant increase in rental supply that is outside the scope of our mandate, the vast majority of the renter middle class is left to face ever increasing housing costs with no reprieve.

As such, I strongly support letting the public vote in support of the ballot measures 1 through 4 proposed by the Commission, especially because the measures acknowledge that meaningful progress in our housing crisis of chronic undersupply will only come from a level of development that the city simply cannot afford to finance through public funds only. We need to make it easier for profit-driven developers to build housing as well if we ever want to build enough housing to meaningfully lower rent prices. I commend the Commission for its proposal to create a new zoning action for publicly financed affordable housing at the Board of Standards and Appeals and to create a fast track review process for affordable housing projects in the community districts that build the least housing. These proposals would unlock new construction leading to more units and reduce the cost of construction per project, allowing the city to finance more housing through HPD. Nevertheless, I strongly believe that the main impact of this Charter revision will be through allowing ELURP and creation of a new Appeals Board that will bypass veto power from the city council and allow for modest zoning changes across the private market in the city. It is these measures that might be the most controversial but are also the most crucial for the Commission to bring for approval to the public.

The housing crisis will be solved in this city when market rate housing can be built in response to market signals and developers have the opportunity to bring as many units to market as possible, and not just through making it easier to build city subsidized affordable housing (which can only serve the poorest slice of our city). Communities have legitimate concerns about development impacts including concerns surrounding infrastructure strain and neighborhood character changes. The current system, however, often blocks beneficial projects entirely rather than ensuring they meet community needs and are integrated into existing infrastructure. Our response to these legitimate concerns cannot continue to be a status quo in which many thousands of families are displaced annually through unaffordability. The proposed measures provide a sensible balancing of these concerns with the harm of inaction and make it easier to move forward projects that can help address our housing crisis while preserving pathways for meaningful community input rather than outright veto power.

Two futures lie before us. In one, poorer future we fail to take bold action and compromise with pared-back measures or no measures at all. Our efforts do not yield much fruit, rents stay high, and backlash and despair set in. Our city grows ever more inaccessible to all but the increasingly wealthy, and poorer New Yorkers are forced to leave the place they call home to move somewhere they can more easily afford. In another better future, we act decisively and turn the tide on housing price increases while ensuring that development serves existing communities. Our market is gradually flooded with increasingly more affordable units, and New Yorkers breathe a sigh of relief as they realize that they can expect to stay in the city and neighborhoods they love. Landlords lose some of their monopoly and are incentivized to make repairs and end predatory rental practices in a crowded market. Artists, risk takers, families, and the poor and disabled get a chance at living in a city that values them and fights for their right to belong to it. More people get the opportunity to move here and contribute to our tapestry of life together.

It is the second future in which I believe and which I urge you to make possible by letting the people of New York vote on these measures come November. I urge you to act firmly and maintain the strong measures you have suggested; preserve the measures that would allow for market rate housing development and do not scale back the bold proposals that this moment calls for by focusing on affordable housing only. We are given a unique opportunity, and we must not settle for less in this moment of crisis.

Sincerely,
Aviel Fradkine

In 2019, I joined many other New York City voters to vote in favor of Ranked Choice Voting. While I was born and raised in the US, many of my family members and friends live in the UK, where general elections do not use ranked choice voting, but there is also not a strict two-party system. Over the years, I have watched many of my friends and family feel compelled to vote for candidates they do not at all like, or whose politics they do not actually espouse, because of a perceived need for "tactical voting." "Tactical voting" would hold that these candidates, who they find mediocre, have a better chance of keeping out the candidates whose politics they (and a majority of people) would firmly reject.

This perception of who could "realistically" win an election versus who could "split the vote" then creates a feedback loop, where questions like "which candidate is best qualified for the job?" move further and further down the list of considerations. Instead of voting for the candidate they think might best represent them, they instead feel they must vote for the candidate most likely to shut out the candidates they find unacceptable.

When New York City adopted ranked choice voting after the referendum, I was excited for a system that would allow me to rank multiple candidates I thought were capable of serving New York, and to simply leave off candidates I did not want to give my vote.

I am disturbed that there is now a movement to replace ranked choice voting - which is, again, a system New York City voters voted for - with another process that we did not vote for. Even if the outcome of this discussion would be another referendum, the timing and context of this discussion feels relevant. In the wake of a primary result that was considered a political upset, The New York Times has reported that Eric Adams - who has expressed an intent to run for re-election without the nomination of a major party - has assembled a panel to examine the possibility of replacing our RCV system. If the public is to believe this panel and subsequent research represents something other than the machinations of a mayor who feels like RCV no longer serves his political interests, what evidence supports the idea that our current process needs reform? Primary participation is increasing. How can the public evaluate evidence for moving to "jungle primaries" when these discussions happen quickly and quietly, without our knowledge?

While I am sympathetic to other factors that might complicate primary participation for New York City voters (such as the requirement to register with a political party in order to participate in closed primaries), I don't think "top-two" primaries solve this problem well, nor do I think they represent what we voted for as a city via referendum. In fact, many reports find that "jungle primaries" can reinforce the kind of decision-making that my friends voting in the UK feel compelled to adopt. Politicians with similar enough platforms are still likely to split the vote, per the following sources, which describe issues with "jungle primaries" as implemented in California:

1. <https://www.vcstar.com/story/news/local/2018/05/19/californias-odd-primary-election-rules-worry-democrats-house-representatives/626273002/>

3. <https://www.nytimes.com/2018/05/24/us/california-primary-election-rules-system.html>

Please consider also that 78% of voters reported in an exit poll that they understood our current ranked choice voting extremely well or very well.

Why change a system that many voters understand and have become accustomed to? Many initial arguments against RCV proposed that voters would find the change difficult. However, opponents of RCV now suggest yet another change in ballot presentation.

The point of an election is not to deliver the outcome that current, sitting elected officials will expect or prefer. The point of an election is to express the will of the people as accurately as possible, and I am not convinced that the proposed changes to primaries will do this.

Preserving Community Boards' Essential Role in Democratic Land Use Decision-Making and Other Matters

Submitted by: Lloyd Feng

I am a Full Board Member of Brooklyn Community Board 1 where I serve as Chair of the Public Safety & Human Services Committee, and Co-Chair of the Capital Budget Committee, but I am submitting written testimony today in my personal capacity.

Introduction

I submit this testimony to urge the Charter Revision Commission to preserve and strengthen, rather than undermine, the vital role that community boards play in New York City's land use review process. As a member of Brooklyn Community Board 1, which serves Williamsburg and Greenpoint, I have witnessed firsthand how community boards serve as democracy's front line, ensuring that residents have meaningful input into decisions that directly affect their neighborhoods.

The Irreplaceable Value of Community Boards

Community boards represent the cornerstone of participatory democracy in New York City. While community boards serve in an advisory capacity—providing recommendations rather than binding decisions—they are uniquely positioned to convene residents, business owners, and community stakeholders to provide essential local knowledge and perspective on land use decisions, State Liquor Authority applications, Dining Out NYC applications, and countless quality of life issues. Under the oversight of borough presidents, community boards ensure that these advisory recommendations reflect genuine community needs and local expertise that would otherwise be absent from top-down planning processes.

The community board system recognizes a fundamental democratic principle: those who live with the consequences of land use decisions should have meaningful opportunities to inform and influence them. While the final authority rests with the City Planning Commission, community boards provide accessible forums where working families, long-term residents, small business owners, and community organizations can participate in shaping recommendations that carry significant weight in the decision-making process. This advisory role, when functioning properly, ensures that technical and political decisions are grounded in community knowledge and democratic input.

Proactive Community Engagement in Practice

Brooklyn Community Board 1 exemplifies how community boards can serve as constructive facilitators in the land use process. Our board and Land Use Committee actively encourage applicants to present their proposals even before beginning the formal ULURP process, fostering constructive dialogue between developers and community members. This pre-ULURP engagement allows for meaningful exchange of ideas, identification of community concerns, and collaborative problem-solving that can lead to better projects and stronger community support.

Our board generously dedicates precious time at monthly full board meetings—time that could otherwise be spent on quality of life presentations and other community issues—to accommodate these pre-ULURP presentations. This reflects our collective recognition that bringing applicants and community members together early in the process serves everyone's interests. The best outcome is a community board recommendation that reflects genuine consensus between developers and residents, achieved through transparent dialogue and mutual understanding of both project goals and community needs.

This proactive approach demonstrates how community boards serve not merely as advisory reviewers, but as essential conveners who facilitate democracy in action. When given adequate time and meaningful influence in the overall process, community boards can help transform potentially contentious land use decisions into collaborative solutions that serve both development goals and community interests.

Serious Threats in the Proposed Charter Amendments

Ballot Question 1: Fast Track for Affordable Housing - Sections 197-f and 197-e

While affordable housing is critically important, the proposed "fast track" process significantly diminishes the weight of community board advisory input. Under the new Section 197-f, affordable housing projects in the twelve community districts with the lowest affordable housing production would bypass the standard Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP) and instead follow an expedited process under Section 197-e.

Specific impacts on community board advisory role:

- Elimination of City Council review: Unlike current ULURP, these expedited applications bypass City Council review entirely (Section 197-e(g)), meaning community board recommendations receive no further democratic consideration beyond the City Planning Commission
- Compressed overall process: While community boards retain 60 days for review, the elimination of subsequent Council review and compressed overall timeline reduces the practical weight of community advisory input
- Limited recourse: The City Planning Commission can override community board recommendations with only a written explanation, with no further oversight mechanisms to ensure meaningful consideration of local input

Charter language at risk: Section 197-e(g) states that expedited applications "shall not be subject to review pursuant to section one hundred ninety-seven-d," eliminating the Council review process where community board recommendations traditionally receive full consideration.

Ballot Question 2: Expanded Expedited Land Use Review Procedure

This proposal dramatically expands the expedited review process to cover numerous additional categories of projects, further reducing the practical influence of community board advisory recommendations:

Additional projects subject to expedited review include:

- City map changes for affordable housing, resiliency projects, and infrastructure improvements
- Zoning district designations allowing increases in residential capacity (up to 30% floor area increases or building heights up to 45 feet)
- Site selection for resiliency projects, solar installations, and open space creation with buildings up to 5,000 square feet
- Sale, lease, or disposition of city property to affordable housing developers, abutting property owners, or for solar projects
- Acquisition of property for affordable housing development, voluntary buy-out programs, and resiliency projects

Impact on community board advisory role: While community boards retain their 60-day review period, these expanded categories represent a significant portion of land use decisions that currently undergo full ULURP review where community board recommendations receive broader consideration in the decision-making process. Under expedited review, the compressed timeline and reduced oversight substantially diminish the weight and influence of community board input.

Ballot Question 3: Land Use Appeals Board - Section 197-g

I commend the intent behind this proposal to make the land use review process more responsive to the urgent need for increased housing supply in New York City. The housing crisis demands that we examine whether current processes adequately balance community input with the citywide imperative to create more housing opportunities.

However, the proposed Land Use Appeals Board raises serious concerns about democratic governance and conflicts of interest. This three-member board—consisting of the mayor, council speaker, and affected borough president—can override City Council decisions that may reflect community board recommendations and broader public input.

Democratic and conflict of interest concerns:

- Undemocratic structure: The board concentrates override authority in just three individuals, potentially nullifying decisions made through the broader democratic process involving community boards, borough presidents, and the City Planning Commission
- Borough President conflicts: Borough presidents, who oversee community boards and are supposed to represent community interests, face inherent conflicts when serving on a board that can override those same community recommendations
- Speaker representation questions: The Council Speaker represents only one district and is elected by Council members rather than citywide voters, raising questions about their authority to override land use decisions affecting communities across all five boroughs where they may lack local knowledge and democratic mandate
- Reduced accountability: Unlike the current system where decisions undergo multiple levels of democratic review, the appeals board operates with limited public oversight and compressed timelines

Fundamental Democratic Principles at Stake

These proposed changes reflect a troubling trend toward technocratic decision-making that diminishes meaningful community advisory input in favor of expedited approvals. While efficiency has value, democracy requires that advisory processes carry genuine weight in decision-making, especially for land use decisions that permanently alter neighborhood character.

Community boards provide irreplaceable advisory benefits:

- Local expertise: Board members live and work in the communities they serve, bringing intimate knowledge of local conditions, needs, and concerns that inform better decision-making
- Proactive facilitation: Boards like Brooklyn CB1 actively encourage pre-ULURP presentations, creating opportunities for constructive dialogue between applicants and community members that can lead to better projects and stronger consensus
- Accessible forums: Community board meetings provide venues where residents can engage directly with the advisory process and ensure their concerns reach decision-makers, while also allowing developers to present their proposals and respond to community input
- Transparency: The public hearing process ensures development proposals receive public scrutiny and community input, with opportunities for collaborative problem-solving
- Democratic legitimacy: Regular meetings and public participation create ongoing accountability and ensure that advisory recommendations reflect genuine community perspectives rather than narrow interests

When community board advisory input carries meaningful weight in the decision-making process, it improves outcomes by incorporating local knowledge and ensuring that development serves communities rather than simply occurring within them.

Recommendations

Rather than diminishing the weight of community board advisory input, the Charter Revision Commission should:

1. Preserve meaningful review processes for significant land use decisions, ensuring community board advisory recommendations receive full consideration through adequate oversight mechanisms
2. Maintain meaningful consultation requirements that ensure community board input genuinely informs decision-making, not merely satisfies procedural requirements
3. Strengthen community board resources to enhance the quality and impact of their advisory role rather than constraining their influence in the process
4. Address conflicts of interest in any appeals process to ensure democratic accountability and avoid situations where officials override the very communities they represent

For housing supply challenges specifically, the Commission should explore reforms that expedite review timelines while preserving meaningful opportunities for community advisory input, rather than creating processes that bypass community boards or render their recommendations ineffective.

Additional Community Board-Related Recommendations

Beyond the critical land use concerns outlined above, the Charter Revision Commission should address other areas where community board effectiveness could be enhanced:

Dining Out NYC Application Review Period: The current community input period for Dining Out NYC applications should be extended from 40 days to 60 days to align with other community board review processes. This extension would allow community boards adequate time to coordinate public meetings and gather meaningful community feedback on roadside dining and sidewalk cafe applications that directly impact neighborhood quality of life and pedestrian safety.

Community Board Member Accountability and Transparency: The Commission should establish required reporting mechanisms for community board member removals and non-reappointments by borough presidents and/or councilmembers. Such reporting should include the reasons for removal or non-reappointment to ensure transparency in the appointment process and accountability from elected officials who make these decisions. This transparency would help the public understand whether board composition changes reflect legitimate concerns about member performance or inappropriate political interference with community representation.

Preserve Current Appointment Process: The Commission should reject any proposals to alter the current community board appointment process and should strongly preserve the borough president's central role in making appointments to the full board. The existing system, where borough presidents make appointments with input from councilmembers, ensures appropriate democratic accountability while maintaining borough-wide perspective in board composition. Any diminishment of the borough president's appointment authority would fragment community board governance and potentially undermine the cohesive, borough-wide coordination that enables effective community representation.

Conclusion

The community board system represents one of New York City's greatest democratic innovations. These neighborhood-level advisory bodies ensure that development serves communities rather than simply occurring within them. While community boards serve in an advisory capacity, their recommendations have historically carried significant weight because they reflect genuine community knowledge and democratic participation. The proposed charter amendments threaten to transform community boards from meaningful advisory participants whose input genuinely influences decisions into perfunctory consultative bodies whose recommendations can be easily dismissed in the name of expedited approvals.

True democratic governance requires that those most affected by land use decisions have genuine opportunities to inform and influence them through meaningful advisory processes. Community boards, under borough president oversight, provide this essential democratic function. Their advisory role works best when their recommendations receive serious consideration through appropriate levels of democratic review and oversight.

I urge the Charter Revision Commission to preserve and strengthen, rather than undermine, this critical component of New York City's democratic infrastructure. The residents of Williamsburg, Greenpoint, and communities throughout New York City deserve advisory processes that carry genuine weight in decision-making, not expedited procedures that prioritize speed over community input. When community boards have adequate time and meaningful influence—as demonstrated by Brooklyn CB1's successful practice of facilitating pre-ULURP dialogue between applicants and residents—they can help achieve outcomes that serve both development goals and community interests. Democracy requires that advisory input be meaningful, and that the expertise and perspectives of community boards inform better decisions for all New Yorkers.

Thank you so much for your time and consideration,

Lloyd Feng
