THE TEST:

The multiple-choice test will be given at a computer terminal. Your score on this test will be used to determine your place on an eligible list. You must achieve a score of at least 70% to pass the test.

The multiple-choice test is designed to assess the extent to which candidates have certain abilities determined to be important to the performance of the tasks of a Environmental Police Officer.

The test may include questions requiring the use of any of the following abilities:

Written Comprehension: understanding written sentences and paragraphs. Example: An Environmental Police Officer might use this ability when reviewing an incident report.

Written Expression: using English words or sentences in writing so that others will understand. Example: An Environmental Police Officer might use this ability when recording the details of an unusual incident.

Memorization: remembering information, such as words, numbers, pictures and procedures. Pieces of information can be remembered by themselves or with other pieces of information. Example: An Environmental Police Officer might use this ability to recall the details of a suspect or vehicle that is fleeing the scene of a crime.

Problem Sensitivity: being able to tell when something is wrong or is likely to go wrong. It includes being able to identify the whole problem as well as elements of the problem. Example: An Environmental Police Officer might use this ability to choose an appropriate action when attending to an individual who is in need of medical assistance.

Deductive Reasoning: applying general rules to specific problems and coming up with logical answers. It involves deciding if an answer makes sense. Example: An Environmental Police Officer might use this ability when deciding if an individual who has been accused of trespassing should be arrested.

Inductive Reasoning: combining separate pieces of information, or specific answers to problems, to form general rules or conclusions. It involves the ability to think of possible reasons for why things go together. Example: An Environmental Police Officer might use this ability to interpret the intentions of departmental guidelines and protocols, and how they relate to an incident.

Information Ordering: following correctly a rule or set of rules or actions in a certain order. The rule or set of rules used must be given. The things or actions to be put in order can include numbers, letters, words, pictures, procedures, sentences, and mathematical or logical operations. Example: An Environmental Police Officer might use this ability when deciding the next appropriate action to take when confronting a disorderly individual.

Spatial Orientation: determining where you are in relation to the location of some object or where the object is in relation to you. Example: An Environmental Police Officer might use this ability when interpreting a road map to decide the most efficient route to take to the site of a crime.

Visualization: imagining how something would look when it is moved around or when its parts are moved or rearranged. It requires the forming of mental images of how patterns or objects would look after certain changes, such as unfolding or rotation. One has to predict how an object, set of objects, or pattern will appear after the changes have been carried out. Example: An Environmental Police Officer might use this ability when comparing the facial characteristics of a suspect to a photograph on file.

Certain questions may need to be answered on the basis of documents or other information supplied to the candidates on the date of the multiple-choice exam.
