CERTIFICATE            28386

RESOLVED That the Design Commission, having considered a proposal for the installation of a marker (First Portable Cell Phone Call), Sixth Avenue between West 53rd Street and West 54th Street, Manhattan, submitted by the Department of Transportation, represented by exhibits 7609-A, D & E of record in this matter, hereby rejects the same, noting that while there was a press event for the first public portable cell phone call that took place on a New York City sidewalk, the phone was not invented in New York City and the event has minimal relevancy to the City. Commissioners also noted concern with the proliferation of markers and setting precedent. Some commissioners supported and celebrated the commemoration of the event and appreciated the team's responsiveness to feedback on the design. Commissioners Castilla, Miranda, Tisch, and Van Bramer approved the project.
