Getting Started with Child Support: What Can I Expect?

Child Support is complicated, and many people who might be considering child support, or who find out they have been summoned to a child support hearing, don't know what to expect. Research shows that many single parents, particularly low-income parents, are eligible for child support but have not applied. This webinar reviews all the initial steps in the process – from starting a child support case to attending the hearing in front of a Support Magistrate in Family Court. We'll cover the necessary steps and documentation required as well as the importance of attending the hearing. The general timeline for establishing a child support order will also be covered. We'll also review our new package of material being provided to parents/guardians applying for child support services and with a court date. Register at <https://bit.ly/3v1Ugyk>.

The Basics of Child Support Account Statements

One of the benefits of a child support case is it provides a record of what has been paid by the noncustodial parent, to whom it was paid, and when it was paid. Account statements inform the parties, and the court about the financials of a child support case. It is provided during a court hearing when an order is already established, and can be requested ad hoc. This webinar will explain the components of an account statement and how to interpret it. Register at <https://bit.ly/4c4tiXo>.

Child Support: Debt Reduction Options for NCPs

Unpaid child support debt is a serious problem for noncustodial parents as well as custodial parents and their children. It leads to enforcement actions that can interfere with job retention, create barriers for father engagement and causes stress for all parties. In fact, most debt is owed by NCPs with little ability to pay. HHS has recommended that debt be reduced to help avoid incidents of child abuse and neglect. Participants will learn about the important OCSS programs that can administratively reduce child support debt owed to the government as well as strategies to avoid debt in the first place and an option for negotiating debt owed to custodial parents. An Introduction to Interstate Child Support Cases

Most child support cases involve a custodial and noncustodial parent who live in the same jurisdiction. However, there are cases where the parents live in two different jurisdictions/states or countries and the child support programs in those jurisdictions need to cooperate and work together to provide child support services. Child support is federally mandated, state supervised and in NY locally administered. While there are many different factors to consider, this webinar will cover the basics of how different child support agencies work together to deliver the support that children need, regardless of where they and the parents live.
