AID ISN'T 'CHARITY,' ZELENSKY ASSERTS BEFORE CONGRESS
He Seeks More Support and Vows Victory — Biden Offers Missile System

By MICHAEL D. SHEAR and ZOLAN KANNO-YOUNG

WASHINGTON — President Volodymyr Zelensky of Ukraine delivered an emotional war-time appeal in a joint meeting of Congress on Wednesday night, telling Americans that "your money is not charity" and vowing that his people would eventually secure an "impenetrable victory" against Russia on behalf of all free nations.

"Against all odds and against all gloom and doom, Ukraine did not fail," Mr. Zelensky said in his halting but forceful English from the dais to the House chamber, where he was greeted with extended applause from lawmakers.

"Ukraine is alive and kicking," he said, "and I give you good reason to share with you our first victory: we defeated Russia in the battle for the minds of the world."

In blunt terms, Mr. Zelensky pleaded for more military assistance from lawmakers, who are poised to approve $43 billion in additional aid by the end of the week, bringing the total over a year to nearly $100 billion. His message: Your support has kept President Vladimir V. Putin of Russia from overrunning our country. Now keep it coming.

"We have artillery, yes, thank you," he said. "We have it, it is enough? Honestly, not really."

Mr. Zelensky's visit to Washington — kept secret until the eve of his arrival for security reasons — was a dramatic show of confidence by Ukraine's leader, who had not left his country since Mr. Putin began his assault 100 days ago.

In the space of 24 hours, just days before Christmas, Mr. Zelensky flew from the battered front lines of a country plunged into darkness by Russian air attacks to the marble-floored rooms of the White House and the Capitol, where he repeatedly thanked Americans for being partners in Ukraine's battle to survive.

Dressed in his war-time uniform of an olive green sweater and a black beret, he said he was "not a soldier, but a leader."

U.S. Predicts Impasse as Ukraine War Endures
This article is by Julian E. Barnes, Helen Cooper and Eric Schmitt. WASHINGTON — As the war in Ukraine enters its second year, Ukrainian troops will find it much more challenging to reclaim territory from Russian forces who are focused on defending their remaining land gains rather than making a deeper push into the country, American officials say.

Over the course of the first 18 months of the war, the Ukrainian military has — with significant American support — accumulated a series of tactical victories, but it is in a standstill and then retaken hundreds of square miles and thousands of civilians, according to U.S. government assessments.

All of these factors make the military situation going into the second year of the war a stalemate in which neither army can take much land despite intense fighting.

"I do think that it is far easier for Ukraine to defend territory than to go on the offensive to recapture territory," said Evelyn Feltus, a former senior Pentagon official and Russia expert. "We need to be providing Ukrainians the necessary equipment and training to do that."

President Volodymyr Zelensky said he was not President Biden when he met President Biden and addressed Congress on Wednesday evening, his first visit outside the country since the start of the war.

Over the past six months, after months of listening to accounts from inside and outside Russia that his war effort to reclaim lost territory was necessary to prevail, President Vladimir V. Putin delivered his own verdict on that crisis on Wednesday: It's valid. It is an unusual acknowledgment of Russian shortcomings. In a speech, the Ministry of Defense said that Russian leader had lost his military areas his military on. He did not mention the loss of territory.

Putin Admits Battle Failures But Fights On

Russia Learns Lessons That Could Change Tide of Conflict
backs on civilian power supplies, Ukraine has still kept up the momentum on the front lines since September. But the tide of the war is likely to change in the coming months, as Russia improves its defenses and pushes more soldiers to the front lines, making it more difficult for Ukraine to make the huge swaths of territory it lost this year, according to U.S. government assessments.

Addressing Congress on Wednesday, President Volodymyr Zelensky of Ukraine presented a flag signed by members of the military.
