The reaction at a bar in Walthamstow, England, to exit poll results on Thursday. The outcome could signal a new era in British politics.

LABOUR IS POISED TO END 14 YEARS OF TORY CONTROL

LANDSLIDE IN BRITAIN

Vote Reflects Anger With Economy, Health Care and Immigration

By MARK LANDLER

LONDON — The Labour Party was projected to win a landslide election victory in Britain on Thursday, sweeping the Conservative Party out of power after 14 years in a thundering anti-incumbent revolt that heralded a new era in British politics.

A nationwide exit poll conducted for the BBC and two other broadcasters indicated that Labour was on course to win around 410 of the 650 seats in the British House of Commons, versus 131 for the Conservatives.

That would give Labour almost as many seats as the record 418 it amassed in 1997, when Tony Blair's runaway victory inaugurated the last era of Labour government.

If the projections are confirmed, it would be the worst defeat for the Conservatives in the nearly 200-year history of the party, one that would raise searching questions about its future — and perhaps even its very survival.

The exit poll, which has accurately predicted the winner of the past five British general elections, confirmed a mutinous electorate, thoroughly fed up with the Conservatives after a turbulent era of austerity, Brexit, the pandemic, the serial scandals of Prime Minister Boris Johnson and the ill-fated tax-cutting proposals of his successor, Liz Truss.

Voters also expressed frustration with the torpid economy; a major increase in legal immigration, despite Tory vows to contain it; and an overburdened National Health Service, which has meant long waiting times for patients.

A senior Biden administration official directly involved in the talks said that there is broad agreement now about the steps required to transition from phase one, a temporary cease-fire, to phase two, a permanent end to the fighting and a release of the remaining living hostages.

The official, who asked not to be identified because of the sensitivities of the negotiations, compared the current situation to the deal that was reached in November.

'Breakthrough' Is Seen in Renewed Talks for Cease-Fire in Gaza

This article is by Aaron Boxerman, Michael D. Shear and Thomas Fuller.

JERUSALEM — American and Israeli officials on Thursday expressed renewed optimism over a cease-fire deal in the Gaza Strip, after Hamas revised its position and Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu of Israel then told President Biden that he was sending a new delegation of negotiators to the stalled talks.

White House officials said they believed new progress in the talks amounted to what one repeatedly called "a breakthrough" in the monthslong negotiations, though they said that it would take some time to work out the many steps involved in implementing the truce. Israeli and other officials involved in the talks agreed that there had been progress but described it in more cautious terms.

The discussions are based on a three-stage framework deal publicized by President Biden in late May and endorsed by the United Nations. If carried out, the agreement would ultimately stipulate an end to the war, a full Israeli withdrawal from Gaza, and for Hamas and its allies to release the remaining 120 living and dead hostages in Gaza for Palestinians held in Israeli jails.
