The New York City Open Data Team is made up of two departments working in tandem: The Mayor's Office of Data Analytics (MODA) and the Department of Information Technology and Telecommunications (DoITT). MODA serves as the City's "civic intelligence" center, working to promote the use of Open Data both within government and in the broader community. DoITT oversees the more technical aspects of the Open Data platform by working with City agencies to identify and make data available, and by coordinating platform operations and improvements. Each City agency also has an Open Data Coordinator, who serves as the main point of contact for the Open Data team and the public, and works to identify, document, structure, and manage the agency's public datasets.

Acknowledgments

As the Open Data team approaches a decade of managing the Open Data Program, we'd like to take the opportunity to thank our wonderful agency partners, as well as community members and institutions across all five boroughs, for their dedication to making "Open Data for All" a reality in New York City.

Dear New Yorkers

Friends,

It's this simple: Data makes our city run better. It optimizes the bus route you take in the morning; finds the perfect spot for a new park; places fire hydrants in the most useful location on a city street; and drives so many of the decisions, big and small, we make every day. Data plays a critical role in making New York City the fairest, safest big city in America—and as this administration furthers that mission, we believe that every New Yorker should have access to public, open data that helps them make a difference in their own communities.

We launched the “Open Data for All” program in 2015, and the results have been groundbreaking. Dozens of agencies have joined public events to discuss the data they produce. We’ve added “Computer Science for All” curriculum to our classrooms, allowing students to dive into the open data. And we’ve required that anyone sharing public data include plain-language documentation, so that every New Yorker can understand it and use it to make our city better.

In this year’s report, you’ll see highlights from these successes and a strategic plan for the program’s future. Our plan lays out a progressive vision for not just the next few years, but for the next decade and beyond. In the spirit of open data, it was not created for New Yorkers, but with them—designed in collaboration with members of the civic tech community and good government advocates, and taking into account hundreds of comments we received about this work.

We will not stop here. It’ll take all of us working together to continue creating a safer, cleaner, and more equitable city—and in making our data more open and accessible, we’re committed to giving all New Yorkers the tools to help make that happen.

Thank you,

Bill de Blasio

Dear New Yorkers,

Have you ever called 311? Seen a letter grade in a restaurant window or a pothole being filled? If so, you've observed the creation and use of public data firsthand.

The built infrastructure—from roads and sewers, to housing and parks—that we use and inhabit is mirrored by a parallel structure of data. When we move through the physical world, a virtual world accompanies us. As data continues to become more closely integrated with our lives and our city, we must think about “data equity” as a new goal, one as timely and urgent as any rallying cry for increased fairness. One key aspect of data equity is how we think about public, open data.

Open data represents a commitment not only to government transparency but to supporting New Yorkers to take action on their own behalf. It is a testament to your right to know what public institutions do for you and how your taxpayer dollars are spent, as well as your right to use that information yourself. This commitment is made explicit by the Open Data for All vision, which states that “NYC Open Data is an invitation for anyone, anytime, anywhere to engage with New York City.”

This report plays two roles. First, it shows how far we've come in the last fiscal year in achieving this vision, highlighting initiatives undertaken by the NYC Open Data Team, and by City agencies, to ensure that high-quality data is made publicly available.

Second, the report describes the City's plans to progress even further towards making Open Data for All a reality. We have taken significant strides towards making data an integral part of government work, and we will continue our work to make NYC Open Data more user-friendly, empower agencies to publish data more easily, and build communities of data use to support all New Yorkers. In the following pages, we share the plans we have crafted to accomplish this, and more, over the next decade, as well as the many ways in which you can get involved.

We hope you will join us in our continued efforts to make Open Data for All!

The Next Decade of Open Data

Vision:

NYC's Open Data Program is a civic problem-solving platform for all New Yorkers.

Mission:

Open Data for All. Open Data is an opportunity to engage New Yorkers in the information that is produced and used by City government. We believe that every New Yorker can benefit from Open Data, and Open Data can benefit from every New Yorker.

“Open data makes city government better in the long run. If we did not have open data in the last ten years, the tough questions wouldn’t have been asked.”

—Joe Morrisroe,
Executive Director, NYC 311

In 2009, three years before the landmark Open Data Law (Local Law 11 of 2012) was signed, the first on-line public dataset was published on the “NYC Open DataMine.” This precursor to the NYC Open Data Platform was launched at the first-ever BigApps competition—which brought together designers, software developers, entrepreneurs, academics, and New Yorkers at large to innovate on tech solutions to civic problems using City data. From its inception, the uniquely collaborative nature of open data was established, and this laid a foundation for years to come as data analysts, City staff, elected officials, and issue advocates worked shoulder-to-shoulder to realize the potential of public data to help us navigate our city, smarter.

What we’ve seen in the ten years since is a city transformed by the increased transparency, accountability, and accessibility afforded by a pioneering open data program. City agencies are embracing the value of open data in helping them fulfill their mandates; local organizations are becoming increasingly sophisticated in using open data to advance their missions; and more and more residents are accessing, analyzing, and using open data to address day-to-day questions or challenges.

Open data is maturing from a publishing platform designed for the data savvy, toward a problem-solving program that connects agencies and residents to the information they need, when they need it. But this is just the beginning—great progress had been made, but there is more work to be done.

A New Generation of Open Data

New York City isn't the same as it was ten years ago, and neither is the data that drives us.

Now is the time to define an updated, shared strategy for the future of NYC Open Data— all while reflecting on shared accomplishments, continued challenges, and the changing landscape. And that's exactly what we did.

Our team has spent the past year working to scale the collaborative spirit that has helped shape this program, from establishing an Open Data Advisory Council and Youth Leadership Council, to co-leading the most inclusive and best attended Open Data Week to-date. Now, we're building a new strategic plan from the ground-up, working alongside the wider open data community, and across the open data impact cycle.

In the following pages you will find an in-depth look at the new Open Data Strategic Plan that will guide our work for the next 10 years. By developing this plan through a robust co-design process (more on that here, too!), and by sharing it with you, our hope is that the next decade of open data will continue to be defined by the same commitment to collaboration that brought us to today.

Developed in 2017, the Open Data Impact Cycle has been a useful framework for understanding the multiple paths that New Yorkers follow (and the skills needed) when they're seeking, interpreting, sharing, and implementing open data to solve a specific problem with open data.

THE CO-DESIGN PROCESS

A Strategic Plan for Data, Democratized

Throughout its history in our city, open data has always thrived because of the people behind it: the data scientists who discover insights from the millions of rows of information; the organizations who take the time to ask us about the data; the agency open data coordinators who work to ensure that data is accurate and identify new datasets for publication; and the many partners who organize open data panels, curricula, workshops, and demos.

As the Open Data Team embarked on this exciting process to develop the City's first-ever strategic plan for open data, we prioritized an inclusive approach that gathered inputs from this diverse set of open data champions to ensure that the new strategy is responsive, actionable, and sustainable.

Together with our partners, Public Works Partners and Reboot, we launched a two-week public survey campaign to better recognize New Yorker's information needs in all five boroughs. We interviewed a cross section of experts from within and outside of City government to understand the open data landscape close-up. And we organized a dynamic, two-day co-design workshop where more than 60 participants addressed common challenges, surfaced opportunities, and helped prioritize key initiatives for the Open Data Program.

This strategic plan is the product of the many people who have contributed time, resources, energy, and thought leadership to make Open Data possible and enrich our shared public information ecosystem. A sincere thank you to more than 200 New Yorkers who helped with this co-design process, whether through surveys, interviews, or workshop participation. We created this together, and hope you see the opportunity that we do to build a better open data program for all.

A special thank you also goes to our workshop speakers: Ben Wellington, Dan Kass, Darren Bloch, Hannah Kates, Kahini Ranade, and Leigh Tami. For a full list of agencies, institutions, and organizations represented at the workshop, please see Annex A of this report.

Connect to open data, offline

The Open Data Advisory Council is a close network of inspirational open data advocates and users. If this is the kind of support you'd like to provide the Open Data Team, keep an eye out for applications for the next cohort in 2021.

STRATEGIC FRAMEWORK

Evolving Open Data from Publishing to Problem-Solving

This new strategic plan draws from our City's open data journey to date. It pushes us to collectively invest in and strengthen our publishing platform and policies, and to build more connections between City data and New Yorkers.

Improve User Experience

Making it easier for all New Yorkers to request, find, understand, and use data

Strengthen City's Capacity

Supporting City agencies and other publishers to NYC Open Data with better tools, more resources, clearer standards, and stronger connections with existing Open Data operations

Build Communities

Supporting New Yorkers with tools and information to help them solve local problems, and amplifying the voices of people who find solutions using NYC open data

KEY INITIATIVES

How We're Getting There

New York City open data is by and for New Yorkers. From the busy bystander to the meticulous data mapper, we all have the potential to influence our city's vibrant open data ecosystem. While the Open Data Program is responsible for driving this initiative, we know we're part of a much bigger community. With this strategy, we want to foster authentic and productive collaboration that will help us to take this work forward, together. In the following pages you'll get insights into the nuts and bolts behind our shared vision for putting our ideas into action.

“Pressures on government are significant, but they are not barriers—they are consistent opportunities.”

*What is a dataset?

A dataset is any asset on the NYC Open Data Portal that is of type "dataset", "filter" or "gis map." All datasets are primary assets, meaning that they are the original source of data. In some cases, secondary, derivative assets are created to make data easier to use. These derivative assets are not included to avoid inflating our statistics.

Downloads give us insights into how users are engaging, helping our team see patterns that can help us improve NYC Open Data.

AUGUST

2018

Open Data Event Series: Learning About NYC Transportation

In partnership with Civic Hall and ESRI, the Open Data Team hosted an event with speakers from the New York University Rudin Center for Transportation Policy and Management, the Department of Citywide Administrative Services, the Taxi and Limousine Commission, the Department of Sanitation, and the Department of Transportation that engaged in a discussion about NYC transportation. The event was free, open to the public, and live streamed.

Metadata for All

NYC Open Data partnered with several community organizations to implement the Metadata for All initiative. The purpose of the initiative was to assess the usability of the metadata of the top 100 most viewed datasets on Open Data, develop a new standard for metadata, and create resources for Open Data Coordinators to learn how to develop metadata in accordance with the new standard.

Participatory Budgeting NYC

Through Participatory Budgeting NYC (PBNYC), community members in 32 participating council districts decided how to spend $35,000,000 of the public budget. The Open Data Program, for the second year in a row, produced a two-page marketing document that was issued to all volunteer managers in the PBNYC cycle and presented to participating City Council staffers.

Chief Open Platform Officer joins the team

Kelly Jin joined the Open Data team as Chief Open Platform Officer. The position is a part of her role as Chief Analytics Officer for the city and Director of MODA.

Best of New York City Awards 2018

Presented by Government Technology Magazine, the Best of New York City Awards program recognizes New York City government and education organizations for their dedication, hard work and contributions in information technology. 2018 was the first year for a new award: "Demonstrated Excellence in Open Data." The award went to Cynthia Nicklin at the Department of Buildings, the NYC Parks Open Data Team and the Taxi & Limousine Commission's Tech Team.

Open Data Event Series: Learning About NYC Public Safety

In the 4th event of the Learning About NYC event series, the Open Data Team partnered with Civic Hall and ESRI and had presentations by the New York City Police Department (NYPD), New York City Fire Department (FDNY), NYC Probation, NYC Department of Health and Mental Hygiene and NYC Emergency Management. The event was free, open to the public and livestreamed.

Announcement of Open Data Advisory Council

The de Blasio Administration kicked off the third annual Open Data Week by announcing the appointments of over 20 community and civic technology leaders to the new Open Data Advisory Council. The Open Data Advisory Council (ODAC) will advise on maximizing New Yorkers' engagement with City data and help achieve Mayor de Blasio's Open Data for All vision.

Open Data Week 2019

The NYC Open Data team and local civic tech nonprofit BetaNYC held the third annual NYC Open Data Week, a week-long festival to raise awareness of the data published by City agencies. As the largest Open Data Week yet, more than 3,000 New Yorkers attended 48 events hosted by over 65 individuals and organizations across all five boroughs. Event highlights include School of Data, an annual day-long community conference produced by BetaNYC and attended by over 400 people; an event featuring the Speculation Watch List, developed by the NYC Department of Housing Preservation and Development to predict where tenants may be at risk of losing their apartments; a workshop teaching volunteers how they can use open data to support their local park, produced by NYC Parks; a data exhibit featuring sixteen artists, curated by Data Through Design at the Brooklyn Navy Yard's New Lab; and a webinar discussion between the City of Buenos Aires and City of New York about each other's efforts to encourage residents to use open data.

Computer Science for All Hack League

The finale of the City's second annual Hack League was hosted in City Hall by BetaNYC, the Department of Education's Computer Science for All program, and members of the City Council. 130 participating students used municipal open data and media literacy skills to identify community concerns, and computer science concepts to build prototypes to address the final challenge — identifying internal and external metrics, potential stakeholders, and extending their prototypes.

Open Data Youth Leadership Council

The ten NYC high school students of the first-ever Open Data Youth Leadership Council presented their final projects in City Hall. The presentations were the culmination of 6 months of working with members of the Open Data Team learning how Open Data can be used as a tool for civic engagement.

Hired Open Data Program Manager

Zachary Feder was hired to join the Open Data Team and MODA as the Open Data Program Manager.

YEAR IN REVIEW

Empowering New Yorkers with Data

City agencies engage the public every day. Last year, for the first time, agencies* were also required to engage the public around Open Data—anything from tweeting about their datasets, to holding public workshops. These are just some of the highlights.

*Only agencies with published data

Grounding Data in User Stories

PLUTO, an acronym for “Primary Land Use Tax Lot Output,” contains records with data on every parcel of land in New York City and is an authoritative source of information on land use and building characteristics. This year, the NYC Department of City Planning (DCP) worked to modernize the creation of their PLUTO database. DCP presented at the FOSS4G North America conference on their process for moving the development of PLUTO out of a mainframe environment and into an open source stack where all of the code is accessible on GitHub. Now, after refactoring PLUTO’s build process, DCP has started implementing improvements to PLUTO. Given that PLUTO is widely used by planners, academics, real estate developers, civic hackers, and others interested in studying NYC’s built environment, DCP held user design workshops during Open Data Week to solicit feedback. These workshops resulted in a robust set of user stories, giving DCP many ideas for improvements. For more information on modernizing PLUTO’s creation, see the slides presented by NYC Planning’s Amanda Doyle.

Access data whenever, wherever

Open data is all around you! Get to know your civic ecosystem (library, community board, elected officials) and see whether they use open data. If not, see how you can connect your community and networks to this public resource—BoardStat is a great example already in action: <https://boardstat.beta.nyc/>

Open Data, On the Record

In early March, the NYC Department of Records and Information Services (DORIS) hosted a webinar to teach constituents how to use OpenRecords to easily submit Freedom of Information Law (FOIL) requests to most city agencies, search for requests that have been fulfilled and released online, and learn how the city handles FOIL requests. The webinar also covered improvements that make it easier to discover government publications on the City's Publications Portal hosted by DORIS.

Parks & Information

Alongside outreach staff from Partnerships for Parks, the NYC Parks Open Data team worked to introduce open data to park volunteers, discussing how it can be used to support local parks. The event included an overview of NYC Open Data, a demo on “reading” a dataset, walkthroughs of tools to view and analyze Parks data, and hands-on time with some of the agency’s data experts. During the event, Parks also debuted a new page on its website, highlighting some of its core public datasets.

Building the Case for Problem-Solving with Open Data

In a March workshop entitled “New York City Building Details: Find What You Need,” representatives from the NYC Department of Buildings, NYC Department of City Planning, NYC Department of Health and Mental Hygiene, and NYC Department of Information Technology & Telecommunications answered questions about city data and facilitated conversations about best practices in using building data to address a variety of needs.

KEY PERFORMANCE INDICATORS

Data about NYC Open Data

While millions of rows of data are added to NYC Open Data every year, we haven't previously shared data about our work. What follows are some initial key performance indicators (KPIs) gauging the health of the program. Further indicators will be developed and shared as the program continues to grow and mature.

User Engagement

Goal: To address user pain points and improve the end user experience

Inventory

Goal: To assess and improve the quality and quantity of datasets on the NYC Open Data platform

Number of Automated Datasets

Open Data is most useful when it's up-to-date. Over the past eight years, NYC Open Data has invested in dataset automation, so that data is updated without human intervention. To date, we have automated more than 310 datasets, roughly 14% of our total inventory.

As the demand for City data continues to increase, and new technologies continue to surface, our goal is to automate more data, at a faster rate. In the last few months we have been testing tools and processes that should bring us closer to achieving this goal. Since December of 2018, almost 60 datasets have been fully automated using these new processes. This is nearly 25% of our prior automation total.

These efforts will lead to more reliable data, while allowing the Open Data Team and agency staff to work more efficiently. We plan to invest more time into testing new methods of automation, and have released a new dataset so anyone can track our progress on automations. Explore our new automations pipeline dataset on nyc.gov/opa/data.

Data Freshness

The data freshness indicator tracks the number of days that manually updated datasets are not receiving new data that they are expected to receive. The inventory is considered "stale" if less than 90% of the inventory is receiving new data within its stated update frequency. In order to meet this KPI we must have less than 5 "stale" days in a given month.

FY 20 TARGET

Publication Timeliness

The percentage of datasets that are published by their scheduled date

FY 20 TARGET

*Of the datasets published in FY 19, 80% of them were published within two weeks of their Latest Plan Date, and 40% were published on or before by their Latest Plan Date. Note that this metric does not currently include datasets that were removed from the plan, or whose publication was postponed.

Can't get enough open data?

In case you didn't catch these throughout the report, here's a short round-up of ways you can get involved.

Connect to open data, offline

The Open Data Advisory Council is a close network of inspirational open data advocates and users. If this is the kind of support you'd like to provide the Open Data Team keep an eye out for applications for the next cohort in 2021.

Find what matters to you

The door to the Open Data Platform is always open. Explore today at www.nyc.gov/opendata.

Did you know?

There is a legally mandated process that takes place when you request a dataset. It's our way of understanding the demand for more data. If there are any datasets you're looking for but not seeing on the platform, reach out to us (as often as you'd like!) via the Help Desk at <https://opendata.cityofnewyork.us/engage>; submit your request by selecting "Request a dataset"

Inspiration awaits

Check out the Open Data Project Gallery at <https://opendata.cityofnewyork.us/projects/>, where you can see some of the latest applications of NYC Open Data. Have something you've done with NYC Open Data you want to share? Reach out to us and you might be featured!

Open Data Week 2020 is around the corner

Keep an eye out for our call for event organizers in Fall 2019. In the meantime, check out Open Data Week 2019 at <https://www.open-data.nyc/> to see what we got up to this past spring.

Any questions on the program?

Mayor's Office of Environmental Remediation (MOER)	NYS Open Spills in New York City	Petroleum spills in New York City that have been reported to the NYS Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC), which the agency lists as open (not yet remediated) and which MOER has been able to geocode. Questions about the data should be directed to NYS DEC.	Quarterly	9/1/2019	NYS DEC publishes current spill data on the NYS Open Data Portal at https://data.ny.gov/Energy-Environment/Spill-Incidents/u44d-k5fk . For New York City data, filter by DEC Region 2.
Police Department (NYPD)	OATH Summons	This dataset includes Civil summonses that have been issued by the New York City Police Department and includes information relevant to each violation such as the charge, date and location as well as demographic information of the perpetrator.	Quarterly	12/1/2018	The NYPD will not be releasing the OATH (Office of Administrative Trials and Hearings) summons data. These violations, sometimes referred to as quality of life summonses, are already published by OATH and are available at: https://data.cityofnewyork.us/City-Government/OATH-Hearings-Division-Case-Status/jz4z-kudi/data The summonses provided in this dataset are issued and filed at the OATH Hearings Division by City enforcement agencies, including the NYPD. For the NYPD to post their own dataset would be duplicative and potentially confusing. (2018 NYC Open Data Plan)

OPEN DATA PLAN

Local Law 244 of 2017: Freedom of Information Law Responses

Local Law 7 of 2016 requires agencies to “review responses to freedom of information law [FOIL] requests that include the release of data to determine if such responses consist of or include public data sets that have not yet been included on the single web portal or the inclusion” on the Open Data Portal. Additionally, each City agency shall disclose “the total number, since the last update, of such agency’s freedom of information law responses that included the release of data, the total number of such responses determined to consist of or include a public data set that had not yet been included on the single web portal and the name of such public data set, where applicable, and the total number of such responses that resulted in voluntarily disclosed information being made accessible through the single web portal.”

Civil Service Commission (CSC)							The Civil Service Commission has posted data to the open data portal which provides the general public with a historic view of our agency's activity for a given year without identifying individual appellants. In the interest of improving accessibility to the data that we have posted, the Commission has provided a link to the open data portal on its website. The Commission hears appeals in Civil Service Law Section 50 disqualifications for employment and Section 76 disciplinary cases. Therefore, the Commission's data consists of sensitive, confidential information of a limited number of appellants. Given the confidential nature of the appeals before the Commission, and the limited segment of the public affected by these appeals, we believe that any further public outreach concerning our data would not be beneficial to the population we serve.
