Chair
Quadrennial Advisory Commission for the Review of Compensation Levels of Elected Officials

VIA EMAIL

Dear Chairman Schwarz:

On behalf of the Council, I would like to thank you and the other members of the Quadrennial Advisory Commission for your service. It is a privilege to lead this body and I am proud of the work we do. As the City's legislative body, the Council plays a vital role in its governance, both at the City-wide level and on the ground in each neighborhood and community. As you are aware, the compensation level for Council Members has not changed in close to a decade. As discussed in greater detail below, during the past ten years the Council has become more productive and its work and processes far more complex. At the same time the cost of living in the City has risen significantly and Member salaries are not on par with other private and public sector jobs with comparable duties and obligations. It is critical that Council Member compensation accurately reflect the essential nature of their service, as well as the economic realities of living in the City; not just for the benefit of current Council Members but so the institution can continue to attract future legislators who are the very best our City has to offer. I therefore believe it is clear that Council Member salaries should be increased. I have attached documents detailing the work of the Council for your consideration.

The modern Council's role in the governance of the City was established by referendum in the 1989 Charter. Pursuant to the Charter, Members have extensive citywide and district-based responsibilities. The Council establishes policy through legislation; conducts oversight of City agencies and other matters affecting the lives of New Yorkers; provides advice and consent for certain Mayoral appointments; reviews citywide procurement policies; reviews and votes on land use and development matters; and oversees, adopts and modifies the City's budget. At the local level, Council Members are an essential link between City residents and their government. Each Member represents on average about 160,000 New Yorkers, and much of their impact is felt on the ground by their constituents. The time commitment for Council Members is considerable and most describe their jobs as ‘24/7’, requiring them to be available around-the-clock.

The Council performs its functions through a committee structure comprised of 37 standing committees including the Finance and Land Use committees, and six subcommittees. Each Member sits on an average of six different committees. The Council never goes out of session and meets as a body twice per month except for July and August when it meets once per month. Committees are required to meet at least once every two months though nearly all meet much more frequently.

The Council has been an extremely active and productive body over the past decade. The Council has passed legislation touching on virtually every aspect of City life including public safety, women’s reproductive rights, policing, campaign finance, environmental protection, transportation and the rights of immigrants. Legislation creating an inspector general for the police department has affected real change in policing in the City. Legislation requiring employers to provide paid sick time to their employees has greatly improved the lives of working New Yorkers. Legislation limiting campaign contributions by anyone doing business with the City, as well as lobbyists, has greatly reduced the influence of money in our elections and our public campaign finance system is widely considered one of the best and strongest in the nation. Our legislation often serves as a national model. Our “Green Buildings” law has had a significant impact on the City’s carbon footprint and has informed such efforts in other localities nation-wide. Legislation limiting our involvement in the enforcement of federal immigration law has affected a change in federal enforcement policies and made New York a safer and more welcoming place for immigrants.

Indeed, from a legislative perspective, the current Council has been even more active than in prior sessions.<sup>1</sup> Council Members have already made 105% more bill and resolution drafting requests, introduced 41% more bills and enacted 32% more Local Laws than through the same time period in the immediately preceding session.

Since 2006, the Council has also held well over 2,300 oversight hearings covering every aspect of life in the City. Each of these hearings involves extensive preparation by staff as well as study by the Committee Chairs and Members. Many of our oversight hearings result in legislative and policy changes. For example, through the Council’s extensive multi-agency hearings on Superstorm Sandy and the blizzard of 2009 we learned of deficiencies in preparation and response to natural disasters in the City. As a result of the hearings the Council passed numerous pieces of legislation designed to address these core operational challenges and to plan for the future.

Beyond legislation, the Council Members must review land use issues and approve, among other things, zoning changes, housing and urban renewal plans, landmark designations, community development plans and the disposition of City-owned property. These powers give our body perhaps the most significant voice in the growth and development of the City. Our decisions in such matters are often the result of years of work – planning, analysis and community consultation – leading up to a Council vote. Over the past decade the Council has considered and voted on rezonings that have dramatically changed the landscape of the City. From the rezoning of Downtown Jamaica, Queens to the Coney Island Comprehensive Plan to the Columbia University expansion the Council has been faced with monumental change and has provided sensitive and smart stewardship. In many cases, as with the East Midtown and East Harlem re-zonings, Council Members lead extensive efforts to achieve consensus—a process of in-depth study, consultation and negotiation. Council Members are also deeply involved in advocating for better development outcomes – organizing communities, developing new policy tools, and communicating with their constituents about planning issues in their district.

In addition to these activities, the Council has refined its rules to make it a more democratic, productive and ethical body. Indeed, rules reform has been an important part of every new Council agenda since the advent of term limits.

In 2006, the Council amended its rules to enhance a Member’s ability to have a bill discharged from a committee and brought directly to the floor for a vote. The rule on floor amendments was liberalized. The Council improved public notice provisions for committee hearings. Further, the Council proposed a number of reforms to the city’s lobbying laws designed to reduce the impact of the lobbying culture and special interests at City Hall, and adopted strict rules limiting access by lobbyists to certain areas of City Hall including the Members’ lounge, the Speaker’s office, the Council chambers and Council Member dais during hearings. Another new rule required staff where practicable to provide drafts of legislation to Council members within 60 days of a request.

In 2008, the Council established new internal procedures designed to ensure integrity and transparency in the discretionary funding process. Specifically, the Council created a new Independent Compliance Office whose duties include the development of best practices for discretionary spending. All groups seeking funding are now required to file applications which are posted online and rigorously reviewed by the Council to ensure that each group is eligible for funding, capable of providing the services for which it seeks funding, and in compliance with all applicable laws and rules including conflict of interest rules. Funding requests of $10,000 or more are also vetted by the Mayor’s Office of Contract Services. All allocations of discretionary funds are now posted online in a searchable database. Finally, all allocations are now either included in the budget, budget modifications or in discretionary spending “transparency resolutions”. In 2012, the Council promulgated rules codifying these procedures.

Most recently in 2014, the Council made major amendments to its rules designed to further empower Members, increase transparency and improve core Council operations. The rules now include deeper disclosure requirements for the Council's internal budget, greater public access to legislative information (including posted plain language summaries of all bills), the creation of a dedicated bill drafting unit and improved legislative tracking technology. Further, Committee Chairs now have greater control over committee agendas, staffing and procedures. Bill sponsors now have greater power to bring their bills to the floor. The Council once again addressed member item reform, this time requiring that all members receive equal amounts of core discretionary fund amounts with additional funding for anti-poverty programs in needier districts.

While all these changes come with much greater responsibility and workload for Members, they have made the Council a more vibrant, effective, efficient and ethically sound body.

At the local level, providing constituent services remains a fundamental part of a Council Member's job. Indeed, Council Members work long hours connecting with their constituents at local events and offer comfort and assistance at the scene of emergencies such as fires, weather-related events, crime scenes and other tragic incidents. Further, the Council has worked hard to realize the ideal of participatory democracy, seizing each opportunity to foster constituent involvement in our work. A prime example of this is our participatory budgeting program, in which community members participate directly in the allocation of tax dollars. I, and three of my colleagues, Brad Lander, Eric Ulrich, and Jumaane Williams, launched the program in 2011 to allow residents to decide how to allocate a portion of their capital discretionary funds. The idea caught on. In 2014, 24 Council Members participated, 127 neighborhood assemblies were held and over 50,000 people voted across the City. This year, 27 Council Members are participating in the process, giving the community real decision-making power over more than $32 million in taxpayer money. Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government recognized participatory budgeting in New York City by awarding the Council the Ash Center Innovation Award for Public Engagement in Government.

Our CouncilStat initiative adds another tool to connect with constituents by streamlining the intake process for constituent concerns on a web-based database platform. This technology enables the Council to compare and analyze constituent issues within and across districts in order to improve the Council's response to community needs and helps us in developing our legislative agenda and budget priorities. Tens of thousands of constituent matters are logged into the system annually and we have seen a dramatic increase in the system's usage over the past several years. We have also launched a new social media campaign designed to give constituents a greater voice in our activities.

The Council also puts a great deal of work into the budget review and adoption process. New York City's $78.3 billion budget is the largest budget of any city in the nation and is larger than the vast majority state budgets. The budget process is complicated and work intensive. The Council conducts extensive budget hearings, reviewing the budget of each agency in detail. The Council's Budget Negotiating Team, comprised of 15 members, reviews all budget items, establishes priorities and assists in our negotiations with the Mayor. The Council also reviews budget modifications submitted by the Mayor throughout the year

The Council's role in the governance of the City is a vital one and if it is to live up to the promise of the 1989 Charter, its Members must be compensated fairly for the responsibilities they bear and the service they perform. I look forward to reviewing the Commission's recommendation.

Sincerely,
