Biographical/Historical Information

Born July 11, 1890, in Lismirrane, Bohola, Ireland, William O'Dwyer was the eldest of eleven children born to Patrick and Bridget O'Dwyer. Patrick was the headmaster of a three-teacher school in Lismirrane, where his wife, Bridget, also taught as an assistant teacher. O'Dwyer began his education at his parents' school and attended secondary school at St. Nathy's College, Ballaghaderreen. After graduation, he started training for the priesthood at the University of Salamanca in Spain but dropped out at the end of his second semester. Rather than returning to Ireland, he sailed for the United States and, in 1910, arrived in New York City.

During O'Dwyer's first few years in New York, he took a variety of odd jobs. He worked as a grocery clerk, steamship stoker, hod carrier and plasterer, and bartender at the Vanderbilt Hotel, where he met his first wife, Catherine Lenihan. In 1916, he gained citizenship and began night classes at Fordham University Law School. The following year O'Dwyer joined the police force and remained there until he was admitted to the bar in 1923. He spent a few years clerking for established lawyers before he opened his practice in June of 1926.

O'Dwyer's first judicial position of note came in 1932 when Acting Mayor Joseph McKee appointed him as a city magistrate. In 1935, Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia appointed him to the Brooklyn Adolescents Court and, in 1937, O'Dwyer became a County Court Judge. In 1939, he was elected to the position of Kings County District Attorney. As DA, he became known for his "clean house policy," and was lauded for bringing down the Murder Inc. crime ring.

After running for Mayor and losing against La Guardia in 1941, he took a leave of absence from the District Attorney's Office. Just as the United States was on the cusp of entering into World War II, O'Dwyer joined the Army Inspector General's office. He made his way up the ranks from a commissioned major to brigadier general. President Roosevelt later named him a personal envoy and Executive Director of the War Refugee Board. Upon his return home to New York in 1945, O'Dwyer was nominated for mayor by the Tammany Democrats and American Labor party. He easily won the election to become the 100th mayor of New York City. At his inauguration, he celebrated with the song, "It's a Great Day for the Irish."

William O'Dwyer's administration was heavily influenced by the depleting effect of World War II on New York City. City Hall directed its energy toward revitalizing the city and toward renewing maintenance and general services. It was the first time the city's budget clocked in at one billion dollars, and a Bureau of Analysis was created to improve the operation of agencies. The administration focused on public welfare, veterans' problems, modernization of transportation and sanitation, housing, reform, and recreation. His office also sustained programs which concentrated on the building of schools, daycare centers, hospitals, playgrounds adjacent to public schools for student and community use, as well as the construction of various parks and beaches around the city.

Concerned with the rejuvenation of public services, transportation, and sanitation, the administration concentrated its efforts on infrastructure, with the construction of new expressways, bridges, airports, incinerators, and sewage disposal plants. After decades of maintaining five-cent subway fares at the expense of good service and system expansion, fares were raised to ten cents. It was also during this administration that Robert Moses became the first and only City Construction Co-Ordinator. His administration replaced trolleys with buses and brought Staten Island closer to the city through additional ferry boats, and the construction of connecting roadways and bridges. Moses also worked to have the permanent home of the United Nations located in Manhattan.

The O'Dwyer administration directed energy toward social reform within New York City. Hospitals, daycare centers, and public and private welfare agencies were investigated. New youth, senior citizen and employment programs were initiated. The mayor's office also involved itself and the city in overseas relief programs. O'Dwyer was unhappy with the state of city government, and his administration expended considerable effort in the reform of the civil service system and city agencies. Several committees and panels were formed to streamline and improve the effectiveness of New York City government.

However, there were issues that plagued the administration. Opening with a tugboat strike in January of 1946, a number of other municipal strikes followed, which generated significant controversy. Continually threatened by a transit strike, the mayor's office was able to avert the menace by raising the fare to ten cents. However, not all walkouts were avoided; some strikes caused a state of emergency to be declared before ending.

O'Dwyer was reelected in 1950, defeating opponents Newbold Morris and Vito Marcantonio. That September he resigned from office, citing ill health as the reason. However, a police corruption scandal had been uncovered by the Kings County District Attorney, Miles McDonald. McDonald alleged that police officers and judges were protecting an extensive network of bookmakers for annual payoffs exceeding $1 million. O'Dwyer vehemently denied any involvement and President Truman appointed him Ambassador to Mexico, although he continued to travel back to New York to answer questions concerning his relationship with organized crime figures.

On December 6, 1952, O'Dwyer resigned from his ambassadorship. Not long after, he divorced his second wife, the fashion model Sloan Simpson, who he had married in December 1949 after his first wife's death in 1946. O'Dwyer remained in Mexico City as a consultant to the law firm of O'Dwyer, Bernstein and Correa. In 1960, he returned to New York City, where he lived until his death from heart failure on November 24, 1964.

Scope and Content Note

The Mayor William O'Dwyer records focus predominately on the operations of the mayor and its office, effects and interactions with other city agencies and the public. The strongest series in this collection is Series II: Subject files. Here, topical subject headings organize the Mayor's records on a variety of important issues, such as transportation, housing, construction, and welfare. Also of note are the records in Series I: Departmental letters, which can be used to track day-to-day operations of city's agencies during his administration. Particularly large in extent is the scrapbooks series, another source for information on a more granular level.

Materials consist of correspondence, departmental reports, manuals, surveys, speeches, press releases, financial schedules, newspaper clippings and memoranda. Also included are architectural plans, blueprints, maps and artists' drawings of various city projects. Many of these items are oversize and have been separated from the rest of the records. Boxes containing ephemera with unknown provenance became their own series. Included within are various awards, pamphlets and miscellaneous material. Non-manuscript materials, including approximately 600 photographs, sound records and artifacts have been separated from the paper records.

Series II: Subject files

Date(s): 1944-1950 (inclusive), 1946-1950 (bulk)

Size (Extent): 87 cubic feet (174 boxes)

Scope and Content:

This series illustrates the interaction of the Mayor's office with other agencies and the public. The series is comprised of material generated directly by the mayor or those within his office, individuals in various city agencies, members of the federal government, or the general public. The documents focus on the extent of the action taken by the mayor's office on a wide variety of issues relating to the functions of city government and city services. The mayor and his office involved themselves in the mechanics of administration, transportation, housing, construction, education, civil defense, welfare, community use, as well as the building of various parks and beaches around the city. The files reflect the achievements of the administration in all these areas.

A large part of the series consists of correspondence, including letters, telegrams, cards, notes, reports and studies. There are records containing information regarding the construction of La Guardia and Idlewild (now JFK) airports; the Interstate Port of New York Authority Bus Terminal (now the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey); the proposed Verrazano-Narrows Bridge and additions to existing bridges. Further improvements in transportation, such as the Major Deegan and Brooklyn-Queens expressways, are also covered. The "Housing" files contain information on the New York City Housing Authority and its various housing projects, such as the Albany Houses, Forest Gate and Governor Smith Houses.

Material concerning the construction of the United Nations building contains suggested sites, street changes and a construction progress chart. During this period other construction projects involved playgrounds, over fifty new schools, sewage and garbage disposal plants and hospitals, particularly, the Sloan Kettering and the New York University Bellevue Medical Center.

Arrangement: This series is arranged alphabetically by subject.

Access: Microfilm should be used. See rolls 1-87 (master negative nos. 47001-47087).

Location: 31 Chambers St., Shelf 4956-5129

Series VII: Applications to Exhibit Children in Theatres, Television and Radio

Date(s): 1946-1950

Size (Extent): 11 cubic feet (22 boxes)

Scope and Content: This series contains applications requesting consent for children to perform in professional theatre, television and radio productions. Written consent from the Mayor was required for any child performer under the age of 16, as mandated by the now-depreceated Section 485 of the New York Penal Code, "Certain employment of children prohibited." At least 48 hours before the application was submitted to the Mayor, a notice and copy of it had to be sent to the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NYSPPC). As such, the applications in this series are typically attached to correspondence from the NYSPPC with their judgement on whether or not consent should be granted. Applications contain information on the child's real and stage name, age and date of birth, place of birth, name and address of their parents or guardians, place of exhibition, nature of performance, time and duration of performance, number of performances, and the dates of performance.

Arrangement: Applications are arranged by performance medium (theatre or radio and television) and then alphabetically by the name of the theatre or broadcasting organization.

Access: This series is not microfilmed.

Series XIV: Local Laws

Date(s): 1946-1950

Size (Extent): 9 cubic feet (18 boxes)

Scope and Content: Most legislation for New York City takes the form of a local law. Local laws are typically enacted through the City Council. In this process, a bill is filed by a Council Member with the Legislation Division where it is then introduced at a stated meeting and assigned to the appropriate Council Committee. The Committee then holds a public hearing on the bill to receive feedback from the public and other government entities, after which amendments may be made to the bill. Next, the Committee votes on the bill. If it passes by majority vote, it then must receive majority vote by the entire Council in order to be presented to the Mayor. The Mayor has 30 days to either sign the bill into law, veto the bill or take no action. When a veto occurs, the Council can override the veto with a two-thirds vote. If it is not signed or vetoed by the Mayor within 30 days, it becomes law and is added to the New York City Charter or Administrative Code. Most of the local laws in this series are accompanied by multiple drafts, notes, and correspondence from city officials.

Arrangement: Arranged into two subseries: Subseries XIV.1: Proposed local laws, 1946-1949, and, Subseries XIV.2: Approved local laws, 1946-1950.

Access: This series is not microfilmed.
