YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION (YMCA) BUILDING, HARLEM BRANCH
(now Jackie Robinson YMCA Youth Center), 181 West 135th Street, Manhattan

Located on the north side of West 135th Street between Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Blvd. and Lenox Avenue, this branch of the YMCA was built in 1918 and designed by John Jackson, who was also the architect of the Downtown Community House, a settlement house built in 1925-26, located at 105 Washington Street.

The branch of the YMCA for black New Yorkers was originally located on West 53rd Street, and the construction of the Harlem branch followed the migration of African-Americans there in the early twentieth century. By the mid-1920s, the area around West 135th Street and Seventh Avenue had become the hub of black intellectual and social life in New York City, and the YMCA building became the focal point of black political and literary activity. Lectures were given, plays and music performed, and classes in liberal arts and industrial skills were offered. Among the noteworthy individuals associated with the YMCA of Harlem were the writers Claude McKay, John Henrik Clarke, Langston Hughes, and Ralph Ellison. The YMCA served as the headquarters or meeting place for such organizations as the National Coordinating Committee on Civil Rights, the New York Chapter of the Negro Technical Association, and the Harlem Writers' Workshop. Demand for the YMCA's facilities and services led to the construction of a large new building across the street at 180 West 135th Street in 1931-32, making the Harlem YMCA among the largest black "Y" organizations in the United States.

The design of this building, in a restrained neo-Renaissance style, is based on that of an Italian palazzo. The high base with alternating arched and rectangular openings is surmounted by a cornice bearing the inscription "Young Men's Christian Association." Arched windows at the second story and an arcade at the sixth story further enhance the design.

anity come "alive Sunday morning," a contemporary remembered. Union Baptist was known as a "shouting church."⁶⁰ Others, like St. Cyprian's Episcopal Church, offered somewhat more reserved services. By 1900 the majority of religious institutions formerly established in Greenwich Village had moved to the Tenderloin and San Juan Hill.

The reputation of the new sections was as unsavory as that of any former Negro neighborhood. The Tenderloin, for example, housed New York's red-light district and was generally known as the roost of underworld characters. Preachers called it "The Terrible Tenderloin." The Reverend Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, always in the forefront of some antvice crusade, attempted to clean up the area in 1892-1895, but business was being carried on as usual in 1900.⁶¹ Negroes and whites owned saloons, cafés and gambling houses that were scattered throughout the neighborhood.⁶² "These dens of infamy . . . are little less than a corner of hell," warned a Negro clergyman. "Fathers and mothers, away down south, or far off in the West Indies, little know of the shame and degradation that have overtaken many of their sons and daughters who have come to the city. . . ."⁶³ The Reverend Dr. Adam Clayton Powell, Sr., of Abyssinian Baptist Church lived in a coldwater flat "with prostitutes living over me and all around me." He preached what he called "gospel bombardments" to the "pimps, prostitutes, keepers of dives and gambling dens," who sometimes attended his prayer meetings. They seemed to shout the loudest for the Lord's forgiveness. Others never came to church. Some "harlots would stand across the street on Sunday evenings in unbuttoned Mother Hubbards soliciting men as they left our service," Powell recalled.⁶⁴ The Tenderloin was also a plum for corrupt and grafting municipal officials. Policemen preferred to work there, it was said, to get their share of underworld graft. A means of reprimanding a disobedient officer was to move his beat from the vice areas. "Anyone who was captain of that district a year," said one man, "could live on tenderloin steaks the rest of his life."⁶⁵ Local police inspectors were known as "Czars of the Tenderloin."⁶⁶

There was also a vital and hopeful aspect about life in this Negro community. It centered around West Fifty-third Street between Sixth and Seventh Avenues—the Main Street for respectable folk of Negro Tenderloin. "West Fifty-third Street," the pastor of Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church remembered, "was the principal place of resort for our group."⁶⁷ On this street could be found, in 1900 or shortly thereafter, many of the major institutions of Negro New York: Negro political clubs, Mount Olivet Baptist Church, St. Mark's Methodist Episcopal Church, St. Benedict-the-Moor-Roman Catholic Church,⁶⁸ offices of the major Negro fraternal societies, two Negro hotels, varieties of small businesses and the Negro YMCA.

The YMCA was the center of intellectual and social life of New York Negroes in the first decade of the twentieth century. Lectures were given, plays and music performed, classes in liberal arts as well as industrial skills were offered to the public. The Y was originally founded in 1899 at Mount Olivet Baptist Church by its pastor, the Reverend Dr. Charles T. Walker. Walker, a clergyman of national reputation, appealed to his church members and to the Negro community for financial assistance. He wanted to establish a home in the metropolis for southern migrants: "So much trouble is made by the poor fellows having no place to go when they come here. What we need is a place that shall be known to every young man in the South as a home where he can come and find friends. . . ."⁶⁹ Walker raised enough money to lease a building on West Fifty-third Street for one year and applied to the general New York YMCA for membership in 1900. His appeal was accepted and the "Colored Men's YMCA" became one of the first of many all-Negro Y's established in northern cities in the early twentieth century.⁷⁰

The Tenderloin was also known as the gathering place of "Negro Bohemia." New York City was the center of Negro vaudeville at the turn of the century and James Weldon Johnson has described the active and productive lives of Negro show people in these years. Bert Williams, George Walker, Aida Overton Walker, Will Marion Cook, Theodore Drury, Rosamond Johnson, Bob Cole, Harry T. Burleigh, Johnson himself—outstanding artists, actors, vaudevillians, songwriters—lived on West Fifty-third Street and met at Jimmie Marshall's Hotel to trade stories and discuss race problems: "Our room, particularly of nights, was the scene of many discussions; the main question talked about and wrangled over being always the status of the Negro as a writer, composer and performer in the New York theater and world of music," Johnson recalled. "It was an alluring world, a tempting world."⁷¹

Most of the performers earned money that would have staggered

"the exaggerated stories of prosperity which relatives and friends in these cities write to friends at home and the prosperity shown by those returning home in their display of clothes and cash."⁹⁸ Negro students and teachers from the South regularly came to study in New York City during their summer vacations. Some attended the summer session at Columbia University and lived in segregated quarters in Hartley Hall. Others came in search of summer jobs, lived at the Negro YMCA and YWCA, saved their money and returned south when school began: "New York is . . . crowded with a host of young men and women students from . . . southern schools. . . . These young [people] come North every season and work. . . ."⁹⁹

For those who remained permanently, the city was a strange and often hostile place—it was so noisy and unfriendly, so cold, so full of "temptations and moral perils," a "pernicious influence," a "fast and wicked place." "Many of those who have come North complain of cold and chills from the like of which they had not previously suffered," wrote one scholar.¹⁰⁰ The oft-told tale of the sale of the Brooklyn Bridge to the rural hayseed had a basis in fact. One native migrant wanted to know how it was done: "I heard about selling the Brooklyn Bridge," he said, "and I wondered how it was sold, and asked questions about it."¹⁰¹ In 1902 Paul Laurence Dunbar published a novel, The Sport of the Gods, which described the dissolution and eventual destruction of a southern Negro family in the "fast life" of the "great alleys of New York."¹⁰² Southern Negroes were commonly subject to intraracial as well as interracial prejudice. Confronted with this estrangement and antagonism many migrants banded together to try to retain as much contact with the patterns of their former lives as possible:

I'm a poor boy and I'm a stranger blown in your town,
Yes I am,

I'm a poor boy and I'm a stranger blown in your town,
I'm a poor boy and I'm a stranger blown in your town,
I'm goin' where a friend can be found.¹⁰³

Negroes, foreign-born and native, established benevolent, fraternal and protective societies to keep up old friendships and provide insurance for themselves and families in sickness and death. The vast majority of New York's Negro population belonged to insurance and fraternal societies. The largest Negro insurance company of Virginia, the True Reformers, had a branch office in the city.¹⁰⁴ Prior to

36. DOWNTOWN COMMUNITY HOUSE/now Masters Mates & Pilots Local No. 88
105-7 Washington Street

Architect: John F. Jackson

Date: 1925-26

During the early decades of the twentieth century, the western edge of Lower Manhattan was a residential slum that was only beginning to be affected by the burgeoning office building construction along Broadway. Much of the neighborhood consisted of tenements or Georgian and Federal style row houses and mansions that had been converted into apartments (see No. 26). By 1925, when the Downtown Community House was begun, the local population was largely of Syrian origin (see No. 35). The construction of the new settlement was sponsored by William H. Childs, whose fortune derived from the manufacture of Bon Ami cleanser. Childs was also the director of the New York Merchants' Association and was active in several philanthropic ventures.

The Downtown Community House was maintained by the Bowling Green Association "for the perpetual welfare of the men, women and children who live and work in lower Manhattan." The Association demolished the tenement houses that stood on the Washington Street site and architect John F. Jackson's Colonial Revival style brick and stone building was erected. The completed structure housed a health clinic and milk station on the first floor; a library, poolroom, auditorium, and classrooms on the second floor; and a nursery, kitchen, and dressmaking school on the third floor. At the dedication ceremony, Mayor James J. Walker congratulated Childs for his $250,000 donation which was, according to Walker, helping in "turning back the Bolsheviki, helping God and man, and making the Stars and Stripes brighter than ever."³²

The choice of the Colonial Revival style for a settlement house was appropriate since many of the activities sponsored by New York's settlements were planned to assist in the "Americanization" of poor immigrants. Several other prominent settlements, including the Henry Street Settlement, Christadora House, and Greenwich House, also chose to build Colonial Revival style buildings during this period. This style, associated with America's early history, before the country became home to waves of non-English speaking immigrants, symbolized the efforts to instill, in these new arrivals, basic "American" values.

³² William H. Childs obituary. The New York Times, November 3, 1928, p.19.

Street and picked up used books — one for a nickel and six for a quarter. Later, Baldwin followed Moore to the Fireside Pentecostal Assembly at 136th Street and Fifth Avenue. He went to church several nights a week from eight to midnight, and preached once a week on Young Ministers' Night.

In 1942, when he was eighteen, Baldwin left Harlem for Greenwich Village. Soon afterward he met Richard Wright, who seems to have functioned in his life as a spiritual father. (John Grimes's father in Go Tell It on the Mountain is named Richard.) By the time he was twenty-four, he told his biographer, Fern Maria Eckman, "since I was not stupid, I realized that there was no point in my staying in the country at all. If I'd been born in Mississippi, I might have come to New York. But, being born in New York, there's no place that you can go. You have to go out. Out of the country." Despite Baldwin's recognition and abhorrence of the destructive nature of Harlem, it still retains the meaning and emotional force of home for him. He has described it as "the only human part of New York" and in an interview in 1970 said that the only place outside Europe he felt at home in the world was Harlem, "where people know what I know, and we can talk and laugh, and it would never occur to anybody to say what we all know."

In 1945, the Harlem Writers' Workshop was founded at the YMCA by writer and historian John Henrik Clarke and others. James Baldwin dropped in and out at the Sunday evening meetings and Langston Hughes read his poetry at workshop meetings and acted as a critic for the group. In 1949 twelve members pooled their resources and founded a quarterly of their own because they were having trouble getting their work published. Parties, attended by such celebrities as Sidney Poitier, Harry Belafonte, Leon Bibb and Judy Holliday, were held to raise funds. The group often met at Clarke's apartment at 311 West 136th Street. Today his present home, an elegant brownstone on 137th Street, is still a meeting place for young writers and intellectuals.

In 1950 and 1951, writers Rosa Guy and John Oliver Killens got together to form the Harlem Writers' Guild, an institution completely unrelated to the Workshop of the late forties. The purpose was to train young black people in writing, for which a group also called the Harlem Writers' Workshop was set up, and to promote the writers' work by means of parties and publicity. Killens served as chairman of the Guild until 1960, and the Workshop met most often at his apartment in Brooklyn because he had the biggest place. Today it meets at the Countee Cullen branch of the New York Public Library.

Through the Harlem Writers' Workshop have passed a large percentage of the black writers who came to prominence during the fifties and sixties. It was there that Killens first read Youngblood. Guy read A Bird at My Window and Maya Angelou read I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings. Paule Marshall, Louis Meriwether, Lonne Elder III, Douglas Turner Ward and Julian Mayfield were also members of the Workshop. Its meetings featured open and intense criticism of structure, character building, style — every aspect of writing. A number of the novels by writers who came out of the Workshop were set in Harlem. Rosa Guy's A Bird at My Window is a story of ghetto life in the area around Lenox Avenue between 110th and 125th streets. Louise Meriwether's Daddy Was a Number Runner portrays the futility of Harlem life during the depression. Julian Mayfield also describes the numbers game in The Hit, and uses Harlem for the setting of The Long Night.

Two best sellers of the sixties were set in Harlem and portrayed its life vividly. The Autobiography of Malcolm X told the story of Malcolm Little from his childhood in Michigan and youth in Boston to his arrival in Harlem in 1941 as

Dear Reverend Butts:

The Landmarks Preservation Commission is the New York City agency mandated to designate and preserve individual buildings, historic districts, interiors, and scenic sites that have special historic, architectural, cultural or aesthetic significance.

In accordance with Section 25-313 (formerly Section 207-12.0 of Chapter 8-A) of the Administrative Code of the City of New York, you are hereby notified that a public hearing will be held on Monday, July 15, 1991, beginning at 9:30 A.M. in the 2nd Floor Art Gallery of the Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., State Office Building (formerly Harlem State Office Building) at 163 West 125th Street, Manhattan, with respect to the proposed designation of the above listed property. You or your representative are invited to attend the hearing and present any information or testimony relating to the proposed designation. Public hearings are intended to provide a forum for opinions to be voiced regarding proposed designations by interested parties such as owners of potential Landmarks, affected community boards, public officials, community groups and members of the general public. We hope you will participate in these proceedings.

PLEASE NOTE: In a previous letter to you, a different date for the public hearing was mentioned. The date has been changed and the hearing will take place on July 15, 1991.

Public notice of the hearing identifying the proposed Landmark and its site will appear in the City Record of July 1, 1991, and each day (other than Saturdays, Sundays and holidays) thereafter until and including July 15, 1991.

Contact Joan R. Olshansky, Chief of Staff, at (212) 553-1128 if you have any questions about the hearing or if you are planning to carry out any work on the above-listed property so that your plans may be reviewed by our staff to assess their impact on the proposed Landmark. YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION (YMCA) BUILDING, HARLEM BRANCH
(now Jackie Robinson YMCA Youth Center), 181 West 135th Street, Manhattan

Located on the north side of West 135th Street between Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Blvd. and Lenox Avenue, this branch of the YMCA was built in 1918 and designed by John Jackson, who was also the architect of the Downtown Community House, a settlement house built in 1925-26, located at 105 Washington Street.

The branch of the YMCA for black New Yorkers was originally located on West 53rd Street, and the construction of the Harlem branch followed the migration of African-Americans there in the early twentieth century. By the mid-1920s, the area around West 135th Street and Seventh Avenue had become the hub of black intellectual and social life in New York City, and the YMCA building became the focal point of black political and literary activity. Lectures were given, plays and music performed, and classes in liberal arts and industrial skills were offered. Among the noteworthy individuals associated with the YMCA of Harlem were the writers Claude McKay, John Henrik Clarke, Langston Hughes, and Ralph Ellison. The YMCA served as the headquarters or meeting place for such organizations as the National Coordinating Committee on Civil Rights, the New York Chapter of the Negro Technical Association, and the Harlem Writers' Workshop. Demand for the YMCA's facilities and services led to the construction of a large new building across the street at 180 West 135th Street in 1931-32, making the Harlem YMCA among the largest black "Y" organizations in the United States.

The design of this building, in a restrained neo-Renaissance style, is based on that of an Italian palazzo. The high base with alternating arched and rectangular openings is surmounted by a cornice bearing the inscription "Young Men's Christian Association." Arched windows at the second story and an arcade at the sixth story further enhance the design.

Dear Reverend Butts:

The Landmarks Preservation Commission is the New York City agency mandated to designate and preserve individual buildings, historic districts, interiors, and scenic sites that have special historic, architectural, cultural or aesthetic significance.

In accordance with Section 25-313 (formerly Section 207-12.0 of Chapter 8-A) of the Administrative Code of the City of New York, you are hereby notified that a public hearing will be held on Monday, July 15, 1991, beginning at 9:30 A.M. in the 2nd Floor Art Gallery of the Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., State Office Building (formerly Harlem State Office Building) at 163 West 125th Street, Manhattan, with respect to the proposed designation of the above listed property. You or your representative are invited to attend the hearing and present any information or testimony relating to the proposed designation. Public hearings are intended to provide a forum for opinions to be voiced regarding proposed designations by interested parties such as owners of potential Landmarks, affected community boards, public officials, community groups and members of the general public. We hope you will participate in these proceedings.

PLEASE NOTE: In a previous letter to you, a different date for the public hearing was mentioned. The date has been changed and the hearing will take place on July 15, 1991.

Public notice of the hearing identifying the proposed Landmark and its site will appear in the City Record of July 1, 1991, and each day (other than Saturdays, Sundays and holidays) thereafter until and including July 15, 1991.

Contact Joan R. Olshansky, Chief of Staff, at (212) 553-1128 if you have any questions about the hearing or if you are planning to carry out any work on the above-listed property so that your plans may be reviewed by our staff to assess their impact on the proposed Landmark. To arrange for speaking time for yourself or for your representative at the public hearing, please call Ms. Christine Hatfield ((212) 553-1191) by Friday, July 12, 1991.

Sincerely yours,

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION (YMCA) BUILDING, HARLEM BRANCH, 180 West 135th Street, Manhattan

Located on the south side of West 135th Street between Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Blvd. and Lenox Avenue, this branch of the YMCA was built in 1931-32 to expand the facilities of the existing Harlem branch located across the street at 181 West 135th Street. The architect was James C. Mackenzie, Jr.

By the mid-1920s, the area around West 135th Street and Seventh Avenue became the hub of black intellectual and social life in New York City, and the YMCA became the focal point of black political and literary activity. Lectures were given, plays and music performed, and classes in liberal arts and industrial skills were offered. As blacks continued to migrate in large numbers to Harlem, the need arose to expand the existing YMCA branch, which was across the street at 181 West 135th Street. This building, constructed in 1931-32, fulfilled the increased demand for the YMCA's facilities and services, including hotel accommodations. Among the noteworthy individuals associated with the YMCA of Harlem were the writers Claude McKay, John Henrik Clarke, Langston Hughes, and Ralph Ellison. The YMCA served as the headquarters or meeting place for such organizations as the National Coordinating Committee on Civil Rights, the New York Chapter of the Negro Technical Association, and the Harlem Writers' Workshop. With the construction of this building, the Harlem YMCA was among the largest black "Y" organizations in the United States.

This fourteen-story building, faced in red brick, is constructed with setbacks and towers, one of which is capped by a pyramidal roof. Paired, double height entranceways are surmounted by ornate, broken pediments.

Manhattan Tax Map Block 1919, Lot 53

Dear Reverend Russell:

The Landmarks Preservation Commission is the New York City agency mandated to designate and preserve individual buildings, historic districts, interiors, and scenic sites that have special historic, architectural, cultural or aesthetic significance.

In accordance with Section 25-313 (formerly Section 207-12.0 of Chapter 8-A) of the Administrative Code of the City of New York, you are hereby notified that a public hearing will be held on Monday, July 15, 1991, beginning at 9:30 A.M. in the 2nd Floor Art Gallery of the Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., State Office Building (formerly Harlem State Office Building) at 163 West 125th Street, Manhattan, with respect to the proposed designation of the above listed property. You or your representative are invited to attend the hearing and present any information or testimony relating to the proposed designation. Public hearings are intended to provide a forum for opinions to be voiced regarding proposed designations by interested parties such as owners of potential Landmarks, affected community boards, public officials, community groups and members of the general public. We hope you will participate in these proceedings.

PLEASE NOTE: In a previous letter to you, a different date for the public hearing was mentioned. The date has been changed and the hearing will take place on July 15, 1991.

Public notice of the hearing identifying the proposed Landmark and its site will appear in the City Record of July 1, 1991, and each day (other than Saturdays, Sundays and holidays) thereafter until and including July 15, 1991.

Contact Joan R. Olshansky, Chief of Staff, at (212) 553-1128 if you have any questions about the hearing or if you are planning to carry out any work on the above-listed property so that your plans may be reviewed by our staff to assess their impact on the proposed Landmark. To arrange for speaking time for yourself or for your representative at the public hearing, please call Ms. Christine Hatfield ((212) 553-1191) by Friday, July 12, 1991.

Sincerely yours,

Merih Elizabeth Urban
